SNIPER SCARE

Times News Services

DALLAS — Memories of the assassination of John Kennedy were brought back to life here today when it appeared that a sniper had fired on a vehicle in a motorcade carrying Vice-President Gerald Ford.

An early report said that a bullet had smashed the windshield of a police cruiser escorting the vice-president to a speech here.

Police later said that either a rock thrown from the roadway or heat had caused the windshield to shatter.

A search of the area found no spent cartridge casings or signs of a gunman.

Ford came to Dallas to speak at the dedication of the new World Trade Centre, the same destination of president John F. Kennedy when he was assassinated here Nov. 22, 1963.

5% B.C. Mortgages On Leased Land

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Provincial government first mortgages for homes on leased Crown land will carry interest rates as low as five per cent for low-income families.

Cabinet regulations released Friday will allow mortgages up to $30,000 on leased land and set the term of the mortgage at five years.

Regular interest rates will be 10 per cent but special "eligible" rates will vary so that low-income families will not have to spend more than 25 per cent of their income on housing.

The regulation states that the eligible rate shall be set so that the combined cost of the mortgage, the ground rent on the leased land and the property taxes do not exceed one-quarter of the family income.

That lower interest rate, however, can not drop below five per cent.

The regulations come with proclamation of the Leasehold and Conversion Mortgage Act, passed during the recent legislative session.

Housing Minister Lorne Nicolson said at that time about $25 million would be set aside for mortgages on leased land and $15 million for home conversions.

Under the regulations, people willing to divide up their residences to accommodate other families will be eligible for a $12,000 first mortgage on their first conversion and a $6,000 mortgage on a second conversion.

The leasehold mortgages will carry an eight per cent interest rate if the mortgage is the first financial charge on the conversion and a nine per cent rate if it is the second.

Those mortgages will also be for a five-year term.

The first mortgages on leased land can be reviewed every three years and the eligible interest rate increased if the family income has risen.

The mortgages will first be offered to families at the Meadowbrook subdivision under construction in Coquitlam.

The 176-home subdivision was purchased by the government last week and the first houses on the leased Crown land will be available in a month.

The property lots will be leased for 50-year terms.

GOV'T STEPS IN ON IWA DISPUTE

A labor trouble-shooter for the provincial government stepped into the coast forest industry dispute today amid speculation another vote may be held among divided union members.

Deputy labor minister Jim Kinnaird met representatives of the International Woodworkers of America in Vancouver this afternoon but not even the location of the meeting was revealed beforehand.

Developments in the dispute, if any, have been shrouded in secrecy since an official count released this week showed union members split almost evenly on the last contract offer by Forest Industrial Relations, which bargains for 120 companies in the forest industry.

Meanwhile, about 12,000 of the 14,000 union members on Vancouver Island remain off the job for the third week.

Opposition Leader Bill Bennett said Friday the 32,000 members of the union should vote again on the contract offer they narrowly rejected. Turnout for the vote was only 59 per cent and disqualified ballots dropped the number of votes counted to 42 per cent of the membership.

Gov't Ski Resort?

The provincial government may now be the owner by default of the partially constructed Brohm Ridge ski development near Whistler Mountain.

A chalet, some other buildings and towers for a gondola lift were built at the site before financial and other problems put an end to the development being built on Crown land, three miles north of Squamish.

Resources Minister Bob Williams said Friday the agreement to lease the land to Adolf Bauer never actually took place and the developer was told he had until June 30 to remove the improvements.

Improvements were not removed, however, and the government must now decide what to do with the development.

Neil Cook, of N. B. Cook Ltd. in Vancouver, purchased the debentures of Bauer's Garibaldi Glacier Resort company, and Williams said it is now a matter of argument whether Cook owns the improvements.

HERMAN doesn't hum when it comes to feeding time . . . it's a continual series of "eeks" as its tongue flicks in and out to get the nectar from the tip of the finger held out by Ronni Lynn Medwid of Shawnigan Lake. The hummingbird was found in the bush after its nest was destroyed by a backhoe. The bird is now flying free but comes back to the home house at night and at the odd time of the day for feeding.

Unexciting Right Up 'Til the End

Times News Services

Leaders of all four major political parties are making a final pitch to Canada's undecided voters this weekend as a generally unexciting campaign draws to a close.

Betting is that those people will take their indecision to the polls with them on Monday and the country will wind up with another minority regime.

Election night, in fact, looms as the most thrilling part of the campaign with the final outcome in doubt right until ballots in B.C. because of the time difference the last in the country to be tallied are counted.

The part of the nation which holds the key to the future direction of the country's leadership, though, is heavily-populated southern Ontario.

For an in-depth survey of marginal seats which could show an early trend, see Page 2. If you are among the undecided, an overview of campaign promises by all parties appears on Page 32.)

Polls published so far have given the Liberals the edge, but there is enough of an undecided vote and enough margin for possible error in the polls to indicate that the government of Canada still is up for grabs.

That would mean the New Democratic Party, or perhaps the Social Credit party, would have the effective balance of power in a Commons in which either the Liberals of Prime Minister Trudeau or the Progressive Conservatives of Robert Stanfield form the government.

The final search for votes by Prime Minister Trudeau, Tory leader Robert Stanfield, NDP Leader David Lewis, Social Credit Leader Real Caouette and more than 1,100 candidates in the 264 constituencies brings to an end an election campaign that for the most part failed to catch fire.

FORSEY

Controls: Are They Legal?

WOODSTOCK, Ont (CP) — The Progressive Conservative party proposal to impose income and price controls during peacetime may by unconstitutional, Senator Eugene Forsey said Friday.

Senator Forsey, an authority on the Canadian constitution, said the government's ability to control wages and prices is restricted by the British North American Act to national emergencies such as "war, famine or pestilence."

The question, he said, is when does inflation constitute a national emergency.

"When that point is reached is unclear — it's like asking how many grains make a heap," he said, adding that the time it would take a government to declare inflation an emergency "would bog down the allegedly wonderful psychological effects of the freeze."

3,000 Guard Matches

MUNICH, Germany (UPI) — Authorities seeking to avert another Munich massacre have called in 3,000 police, including an anti-guerrilla squad, for the final two matches of the soccer World Cup tournament. (See also Page 12 for World Cup story.)

Police have imposed tight security around the Olympic Stadium, mindful of the Black September Palestinian guerrill a attack that killed 11 Israeli athletes and coaches at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

The security problem has been heightened by the visit of U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who planned to watch today's consolation match between Brazil and Poland, won 1-0 by Poland, and Sunday's final between West Germany and Holland.

. . . UNTIL THEFT DO THEM PART

More than $12,000 worth of wedding rings was stolen from People's Credit Jewelers Hillside store Friday.

Victoria police said the theft — involving 125 to 130 gold wedding bands — was discovered at 5:30 p.m. but could have occurred anytime earlier that day.

A spokesman said the theft was well executed.

The rings are described as plain yellow or yellow with white gold inlay. Some have a letter "A" inscribed inside a circle. Others have a reclining figure "8" with the letters "R.I" engraved inside.

Grits Never Tried On Tankers—Tory

VANCOUVER (CP) — John Fraser, the Progressive Conservative environment department critic, said Friday a confidential cabinet memorandum makes it clear the Canadian government never actively encouraged a Canadian oil pipeline as an alternative to the Alaska pipeline-oil tanker transport system.

Fraser, who is seeking re-election in Vancouver South, said the memorandum was given to him by an Ottawa reporter, who was not named. He said the document was given to him within a week of the occupation of the Indian affairs building in Ottawa in August, 1973, by a group of militant Indians. Officials said then that a number of documents had been taken from the building.

He said the document, marked confidential and entitled Canadian Position on a Northern Oil Pipeline, is dated 1971. It shows the government didn't want to actively promote a Canadian pipeline for two reasons — because it did not want to reduce the bargaining position with the Americans on a gas pipeline in Canada and because the government didn't want to aggravate the Indian land claims issue.

Fraser said the memorandum repeatedly tells cabinet that a decision on whether to support or fight the Alaskan pipeline must be made soon, because United States interests are taking Canada's silence for acceptance of the pipeline.

It wasn't until 1973, Fraser said, that External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said Canada had "only begun to fight" the idea of oil tankers.

Beryl Absolves Food Firms

OTTAWA (CP) — Increased profits of food companies were not a major cause of higher food prices in Canada during 1973, the federal food prices review board said in a report Friday.

A survey of 50 companies by the board showed an increase in net profits of 35 per cent last year and an increase of 14.8 per cent in the cost of food.

But board chairman Beryl Plumptre told a news conference that an analysis by economists showed that if the profits had been halfed, it would only have resulted in reducing the price increase by one per cent.

"The board concludes that the increased profits of food companies, while a contributing factor, were by no means a major cause of food price increases in Canada in 1973," the report said.

Grant Thompson of Halifax, a board member, said halfing the profits only resulted in a slight reduction of food prices because of the small profit margin on food products.

"If you're only making two cents profit on each $1 of sales cutting profit by half would only save one cent on the dollar," Thompson said.

The report said higher profits meant an increase in the rate of return on shareholders' investment, but the study shows the increase was not out of line with what was happening in the rest of the economy.

Rate of return in the manufacturing sector in 1973 was 13.9 per cent while for food processors it was 13.4 per cent. The return for food retailers was 10.9 per cent while non-food retailers got 12.2 per cent.

Asked if some of the companies could have provided the board with misleading figures, Mrs. Plumptre said she doubted it since the companies knew the board had the right to send auditors to check their books.

Basic factor in food costs was still supply and demand, Mrs. Plumptre said. As demand for products increased so did the prices.

Thompson said changes from outside the country also had helped push prices up.

"For instance, when the Australian dollar was revalued, it increased the price of hamburger since we got most of our hamburger from them," he said.

"And when the yen was revalued, the Japanese could afford to buy food from us, increasing demand and causing higher prices."

Thompson said many people seem to feel that the board is trying to do "a white-wash job," but that wasn't the case.

"We're willing to point the finger when we see something is wrong."

Tentative Pact Reached In Construction Tie-Up

VANCOUVER (CP) — The last major union in the British Columbia construction industry strike accepted a tentative agreement Friday.

Ratification could end by Thursday the two-month strike that has tied up more than $200 million worth of projects.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 213, signed a memorandum of agreement for a two-year contract with Construction Labor Relations Association following an all-day bargaining session.

Cliff Rundgren, union business agent, said the negotiating committee is recommending that the 1,500 members ratify the agreement in a vote Sunday.

If the membership approves, and CLRA members ratify the agreement Monday, workers could be back on the job Tuesday, said Rundgren.

Still without settlement are three smaller unions — the boilermakers, glaziers, and ironworkers.

Both ironworkers and glaziers rejected tentative agreements recommended by their negotiating committees, and the boilermakers turned down an offer approved by major unions because they want better increases in early stages of the contract.

Details of the electricians' contract offer were not released, but IBEW had been holding out for a better deal than the package accepted last week by 10 other unions.

Kissinger Must Go to Court

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Judge Gerhard Gesell Friday ordered U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to be prepared to testify next week in trial of John Ehrlichman.

The question of Kissinger's testimony arose when the defence opened its presentation with an effort to tie him to the chain of events that led to the burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

The judge refused to quash a defence subpoena for Kissinger.

Gesell said the wording of his order "... is a polite way of saying he's under subpoena and we may need him."

Ehrlichman, one of four men charged with conspiring to burglarize Dr. Lewis Fielding's Los Angeles office in September, 1971, will testify next week on his own behalf.

The key to his defence is the contention that while he authorized a "covert operation" — he claims he had no idea it would be a burglary — it was President Nixon and Kissinger, then National Security Adviser, who requested that damaging information about Ellsberg be found and disseminated.

At the close of the prosecution's case Friday, Gesell said he may dismiss one of the five counts against Ehrlichman even if the jury returns a guilty verdict.

Ehrlichman is charged with lying during an FBI interview last spring, and Gesell has said he doubts the constitutionality of the federal perjury law as applied to statements by FBI agents based upon interviews with defendants with no one else present.

NOW THEN, THAT REMINDS ME . . .

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Supreme Court judge hearing constitutional argument on the validity of British Columbia's Autoplan scheduled a sudden adjournment Friday to check if his wife was properly insured.

Mr. Justice J. S. Aikins was listening to evidence on the 10th day of the case when, he said, it suddenly occurred to him that his wife was using his car Friday and he wasn't sure if she had coverage under the Insurance Corporation of B.C.

The case resumed after Mr. Justice Aikins checked on the matter and returned to the bench. He didn't report on the outcome of the check.

Out of 1,000,000 . . . 20 Friends

OTTAWA (CP) — In the year 2000 people will probably think of themselves as planetarians — not as Canadians, Americans or Germans—and might live 10,000 miles apart from some of their best friends, says a U.S. social psychologist.

When one can talk to anyone he wishes — via home telecommunication devices now being developed — he can choose friends on the basis of interest rather than on the basis of geography, says Elaine Walster of the University of Wisconsin.

"One's closest colleagues could be 10,000 miles apart," Ms. Walster said at an International Social Psychology Conference which ended Friday at Carleton University.

As society becomes more professionally specialized it will be difficult for people to find friends who share their interests and talents without technological advances to communicate over large distances, she said.

Even now, some social scientists say a population of 1,000,000 is needed to provide a professional with 20 interesting friends, said Ms. Walster.

She said the following innovations seem inevitable within the next 25 years:

— Psycho-pharmacological developments will enable men to shape personality and behavior in radical ways, as well as expanding consciousness and capacity for learning and memory.

—Man-computer hookups will be common. It may be possible to combine the human brain with a whole set of artificial sensors and receptors and to call the tangle of wires and plastic a human being.

—Geneticists will be engaged in programs to breed an intellectual elite, as well as people who are superior in other respects.

Peninsula French

A team of French-speaking university students is introducing Brentwood and Deep Cove elementary school students to informal French conversation, song and games.

Every weekday morning at Brentwood elementary and in the afternoons at Deep Cove, the older students lead the younger students through their theme song — Les Troubadours.

About 70 students from the Saanich Peninsula are enrolled in the 10-day course which ends July 12.

They are learning the cosmopolitan accents of Doris Naef of Switzerland, Helen Wilson of Victoria, Diane bicudid of Laval University in Montreal and Erik Bouillet of France.

The program is sponsored by the Centre Socio-Culturel Francais de Victoria and funded by a federal grant.

During the course, the students take on French names, learn French folk songs, play games and crafts and try to talk to each other in French.

The university students will be teaching classes later in the summer at Cedar Hill, Esquimalt and Windsor Park.

Some Key Seats To Show Trends

OTTAWA (CP) — Political prophets may be waist-deep in confusion over who will win Monday's federal general election, but the public may be able to detect voting trends early by watching candidates' fortunes in several key ridings.

As returns pour in from Newfoundland a half-hour before the Maritime provinces, first attention may be focused on Bonavista-Trinity-Conception.

In that constituency, Progressive Conservative John Lundrigan is expected to give Liberal David Rooney a tough battle in what is traditionally Liberal territory.

Lundrigan has forsaken his old constituency of Gander-Twillingate and is gambling on a win over Rooney, who had a 3,800-vote majority in 1972.

In Nova Scotia, many observers say the industrial riding of Cape Breton-East Richmond seems ripe for a turnover to the New Democratic Party's Father Andrew Hogan.

But if Conservative James MacDougall can win the riding held in the last Parliament by fellow party member Donald MacInnis, the party's present Maritimes strength may hold up.

If the Liberals are able to sap Social Credit strength in Quebec, as some party officials are hoping, rural ridings like Portneuf may turn over.

Conversely, if Social Credit retakes Beauce, won by Liberal Yves Caron by 484 votes in the last election, their fortunes again could be on the rise. Former Social Credit MP Romuald Rodrigue is running again against Caron.

Ontario is seen as the key to the election by many observers. After 1972, the Conservatives held 40 seats, the Liberals 36 and the NDP 11. Half of them, however, are marginal.

Liberal-held York-Scarborough, won by Revenue Minister Robert Stanbury by 1,851 votes in 1972, has swung with the winner in every election since it was created in 1953.

This time Conservative Ron Collister, a well-known reporter, is putting up a strong campaign against Stanbury.

NDP fortunes in Northern Ontario may be indicated by results in Timmins riding where their candidate, Walter Rantala, hopes to overcome the 985-margin of Liberal Jean-Robert Roy.

The NDP picked off two seats from the Liberals in 1972 in Notrhern Ontario — Sault Ste. Marie and Nickel Belt — but if Roy increases his plurality, it could be a hint that those ridings will return to the Liberal fold.

In Manitoba, the Conservatives are trying hard to knock off New Democrat Doug Rowland in Selkirk. Rowland beat Conservative Dean Whiteway by only 30 votes in 1972.

NDP fortunes in Saskatchewan could be given a boost if former MP Rod Thomson retakes Battleford-Kindersley for his party.

In British Columbia, several ridings will feature three-way contests between the Liberals, Conservatives and the NDP. Kamloops-Cariboo, won by Liberal Len Marchand by only 714 votes in 1972, could fall with a swing to the Conservatives.

Burnaby-Seymour, won by Ed Nelson of the NDP in 1972 by 289 votes, could indicate how the NDP will fare in B.C. Nelson edged out former Liberal MP, and now senator, Ray Perrault who had held the seat by 138 votes after 1968.

Some observers feel declining popularity of the NDP provincial government may chop into the 11 seats held by the party in B.C.

Final Shots Fired

the Conservatives and NDP ganged up to defeat the Trudeau minority government's budget to cause the election, the campaign has been fought mostly on one issue — inflation.

The Liberals campaigned on the basis that most of the ills of inflation are imported and are beyond the control of the Canadian government.

Inflation is a problem but the issue of the election was who should lead the country, Trudeau claimed.

Stanfield spent much of the campaign defending his party's pledge of a prices-and-incomes freeze for 90 days, followed by more flexible controls over another period of 18 months.

All other parties opposed controls — Trudeau said it would mean importing chaos and Caouette said he would throw out a Conservative government if it brought in controls should the Social Credit have balance of power.

Trudeau, in his last major campaign speech to a massive outdoor rally in Hamilton, Ont., said Friday the only practical vote was one for his Liberal party.

There was no point electing a minority Progressive Conservative government, he told a crowd of between 10,000 and 20,000 under tents and trees in a huge Hamilton, Ont., park.

The New Democratic Party would never support the Conservatives' plan to introduce price and income controls.

And, he added, "don't give the New Democrats too many seats because if Mr. Lewis had the balance of power he wouldn't know what to do with it."

"It is snake oil," said Trudeau, as he ridiculed the prices and incomes control policy.

He referred to old-time carnival days when "a guy in a straw hat was selling a cure-all-snake oil."

The prime minister said it was supposed to cure everything from "failing eyesights to bleeding gums."

That is what Stanfield is selling, declared the prime minister.

Robert Stanfield, meanwhile, appealed to Alberta voters to support his party in Monday's election instead of the Liberals who provoke fights with Alberta to gain votes in Ontario.

Stanfield departed from a prepared text to deliver the attack in a province which has been in conflict with Ottawa over the energy issue.

"I don't know why anyone would vote for the government of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and Energy Minister Donald Macdonald, who tried to pick fights at every opportunity and tried to put your province in a poor light in order to gain votes in the province of Ontario," he told a rally in Medicine Hat.

Lewis makes a number of appearances in Windsor, Ont., then travels to Oshawa and back to Toronto. He will spend voting day in his York South riding in Toronto.

And Caouette plans to continue his campaign in his home riding of Temiscamingue in Quebec.

Just Not Their Week

It was a bad week for the Kitching family of 2953 Glen Lake — first their roof caught fire and then their vacation went up in smoke.

It started Canada Day. A neighbor saw smoke coming from the roof and called Langford firemen who quickly put out the blaze. Damage was estimated at $300.

In the excitement, Mildred Kitching took a small metal cash box she was keeping in the attic and put it under her bed. The box contained more than $1,000 cash plus passports and important papers which she and her husband Robert planned to use on a vacation.

On Friday morning, just hours before their intended departure, she discovered the box missing.

Colwood RCMP investigated and located the box later that day in Glen Lake. It was empty.

A police spokesman said the investigation is continuing.

Police feel there may be a tie-in with other recent breakins in the Glen Lake area.

The spokesman said, however, the Kitching loss was the most serious so far reported.

"In all the other cases the thefts were rather petty," he said.

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — The Pittston Co. confirmed Friday that a $64-million federal court suit filed by 645 survivors and relatives of victims in the Buffalo Creek flood had been settled out of court for $13.5 million.

CBC BACKTRACKS ON POLL REPORT

TORONTO — The CBC said in a statement Friday night that a press release it issued Thursday on its final pre-election public opinion poll did not completely reflect the poll results or the television show on which they were made public.

The clarifying CBC statement said:

"There was no problem with either the survey or the half-hour program based on the survey. . . .

"The second paragraph of the original release read:

" 'Analysis of the survey conducted by a well-known Canadian research firm, indicates that the July 8 election is almost certain to produce another minority government and that a Progressive Conservative minority government now is a strong possibility.'

"The paragraph should have read:

" 'Analysis of the survey, conducted by a well-known Canadian research firm, indicates that the July 8 election is almost certain to produce another minority government, probably a Liberal minority government, but that a Progressive Conservative minority government now is a possibility.' "

Sometimes Bird-Watching a Linguistic Ramble

STRAY FEATHERS
harold hosford

The Greeks, as usual, had a wird for it. Take chordeiles — the evening traveller — for example.

Before you students of Homer and the Lliad rise upin wrath at my liberties with classic Greek, let me explain: chordeiles is a Latinized word with Greek roots, a word devised by 19th century naturalists to describe a bird which is best known as a feature of summer evening skies in North America. We know the bird better as the night hawk, a bird that is neither a hawk, nor particularly nocturnal; so much for modern nomenclature.

Whether chordieiles is true Greek, Latinized Greek, or the Greek of poetic licence, it is still undoubtedly the most appropriate word to describe the night hawk, And who better deserves the credit for its coinage than those ancient Greeks who gave us Khoreo and deile from which to build it.

I was sent on this linguistic ramble recently by a sound heard drifting down from the evening sky, a sound almost lost in the cacophony of minibike cadenzas, gravel-truck crescendos, bulldozer adagois and dual-carb arias which usually parade our lives these days, but an identifiable sound just the same.

If was the distinctive, gentle "peeent" so characteristic of the evening traveller with the Grecian handle, the night hawk.

Night hawks are classed as common summer residents hereabouts by any authority I have access to, but you couldn't prove it by me. In my experience, night hawks so seldom come my way on southern Vancouver Island in the nesting season that any I do see or hear are worthy of note.

But the sound of that single evening traveller high over Esquimalt Lagoon brought to mind another curious fact about these birds, at least about the family they belong to — the caprimulgida — or the so-call goatsuckers.

Now that piece of knowledge might be just enought to generate a groundswell of opinion, among goat lovers in these parts, dedicated to the premise that the only good goatsucker is a dead goatsucker.

Fortunately, the name goatsucker is a bum rap, and, once again, the Greeks had a hand in it.

Folk lore often has its roots buried so deply in antiquity that the origins of such ideas as birds sucking milk from goats are forever lost. But we can at least trace the idea to a reliable authority who, if he didn't start the story, certainly did a lot to perpetuate it.

I speak of Aristotle no less. More than 2,300 years ago he wrote of a Eurasian member of the caprimulgidae, that "they fly to the udders of she-goats and suck them and so get their name."

An explanation, if such there be, could revolve around a habit of many insectiverous birds — and the caprimulgidae are entirely insectivorous — of hawking for insects among grazing livestock.

Since livestock in ancient Greece meant goats, it doesn't require much in the way of imagination to transform the darting, twisting insect-hunting flights of these birds into caprimulgidae flights — goat milking flights.

Once again, the work itself is Latin but the idea is Greek!

No Fiat Needed To Sue Gov't After Aug. 1

Starting August 1, all persons in British Columbia will be permitted to sue the Crown without first seeking government approval.

The Crown Proceedings Act, passed during the spring session of the legislature, was proclaimed by cabinet Thursday.

It allows people to sue the provincial government without first acquiring a fiat from the government to do so.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald, who introduced the legislation, said at the time it would "give the people of B.C. their day in court" by treating the Crown as any other individual or entity.

There are some special regulations stipulated in the bill, however, including a provision that, in all proceedings against the Crown, trial shall be without a jury.

Courts will not be allowed to grant injunctions or make orders for special performance against the Crown, but in such cases where an individual would be ordered in such a manner the court instead will make an order declaring the rights of the parties.

Also proclaimed at this week's cabinet meeting were the Institute of Technology (B.C.) Act and the Universities Act.

The BCIT legislation allows the institute independent status and autonomy similar to that granted B.C. universities while the university legislation creates a powerful new universities council to act as intermediary between the universities and the government

AUCTIONED CROSS BACK TO CANADA

LONDON (CP) — A highly-prized Victoria Cross, won by a Canadian officer in the First World War, will be returned to Canada for display in the Canadian War Museum or the archives of the British Columbia Regiment.

After brisk bidding at Soetheby's Friday, the high award for bravery was purchased by Spink's, the London coin and medal dealers, on behalf of the Stephen B. Roman Foundation of Toronto.

The medal, awarded to Capt. Edward Bellew of the British Columbia Regiment for an action near Ypres in April, 1915, brought a record price of £6,000 ($13,800), almost twice the previous price paid for a Victoria Cross.

The medal will be placed in permanent custody of the Royal Canadian Legion with the recommendation that it be displayed either in the War Museum or the regimental archives, the foundation said.

Fight Brewing Over Gas Supply

VANCOUVER (CP) — A fight is brewing between B.C. Hydro and Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. for the right to build a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island.

Both parties have filed preliminary reports to the crown-owned B.C. Petroleum Corporation and both expect to be granted authorization because of their positions.

Hydro director and Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer said he thinks Hydro should be allowed to construct the line so that the benefits accrue to the public. He feels the cabinet will agree.

Westcoast maintains that under a contract with the petroleum corporation only Westcoast possesses the authority to build the pipeline.

Cost is almost certain to exceed $100 million.

Petroleum corporation chairman James Rhodes said he expects to submit to the cabinet in about two or three months a report on the feasibility of supplying natural gas to the island.

Last week Rhodes assigned corporation director John Caplette to study alternative methods of transporting gas to the island.

Polls Close ICBC

VANCOUVER (CP) — All claims centres operated by the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia will close at 4 p.m. Monday, federal election day, instead of the usual 6 p.m.

The Federal Election Act stipulates that all employees must have four clear hours on election day for voting purposes. Polls close at 8 p.m.

Norman Bortnick, ICBC president and general manager, said Monday is normally the busiest day of the week for claims and some motorists may be inconvenienced by the early closing. The election act, however, leave ICBC with no alternative, Bortnick said.

New DES Talks Set

WASHINGTON (FP) — Canadian and United States officials have agreed tentatively to meet in Ottawa next week to discuss Canada's continuing ban on the import of American beef, officials of both governments said Friday.

During the last two weeks, U.S. and Canadian officials agred informally that there could be no progress in talks aimed at ending the embargo until after the Canadian federal election.

The Canadian ban on U.S. beef and cattle was imposed April 9, after failure to agree with Washington on a certification program that would assure American producers had not used diethylstibestrol, a growth-stimulant. DES, as the hormone is commonly called, has been found to cause cancer in laboratory animals. Its use is outlawed in Canada, but is legal in the U.S.

"Where do we go to vote for the man of my choice..."

This Monday July 8th...

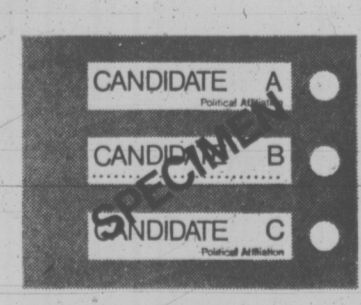
over 13 million Canadians have the right to choose who will govern their country.

If your name is on the voters' list, you have the right to vote.
By now you should know whether or not your name is on the voters' list for Monday's federal election. If it is on the list, you have the right to cast your vote for the one candidate you would like to represent you in the next parliament.

The place where you live is probably just a hop, skip and a jump from the place where you vote.
You vote at the polling station for your polling division. In most parts of Canada, the polling station is close by in the neighbourhood or community where the voters live. This coming Monday, your polling station will be open from 9 in the morning to 8 in the evening (daylight saving time).

Voting is as simple as marking an "X" in the circle.
Instructions on the simple voting procedures are in plain view in the polling station and in the polling booth. They're easy to follow. But, if you need any help just ask the person who gives you your ballot paper. That person is your deputy returning officer.

The ballot paper he will give you looks like the one pictured here. The names of the candidates are listed alphabetically and their political affiliation (if any) is printed under the name of each candidate. You can vote for only one candidate. You vote for your one choice by making an "X" in the circle after his name.



Your vote is your business and your business alone. The ballot is secret.

What Will Most Help Canada?

Close students and casual observers of the current election campaign appear to have at least one thing in common — few if any of them venture to predict more than a very close finish, regardless of whether the Liberals or the Conservatives win. But the lack of a consensus among the pundits reflects a similar absence of certainty among the people: declarations of support for either old-line party are usually accompanied by reservations. The fact seems to be that Canadian voters are becoming more cynical than before, more doubtful of panaceas, more apt to see basic similarities in both parties.

With the inflation issue looming largest in the party platforms and the public mind, Mr. Trudeau is charged with failing to solve it, with taking a long-term approach to its solution, with appearing to lack a full appreciation of its severity. He has chosen to make the malady bearable rather than to try to eradicate it. It must be said that there is merit in seeking to correct the causes of inflation rather than merely trying to bottle it up, but the real remedy must lie in antidotes which will not be popular; all parties hesitate to be the one that will impose the tough cure.

Mr. Stanfield, on the other hand, meets with a good deal of scepticism when presenting his program of a 90-day freeze on prices and incomes to be followed by a period of controls. Too many people just don't believe inflation can be mastered so easily, and Mr. Stanfield has compounded these doubts by failing to give specific details of his plan. There is concern, too, over the report that the freeze-and-control plank in the Conservative platform was introduced by the campaign manager as one most likely to cause the Liberals trouble, rather than as a policy believed to be effective. This would account for the absence of a detailed and organized program.

Mr. Trudeau's government has spent money like water, to the great consternation of many people. In the closing days of the campaign he has issued alarming promises to spend much more, on welfare and other projects designed to ease the inflationary and unemployment problems for Canadians.

Mr. Stanfield, while deploring the rising cost of government, has done little to inspire widespread confidence, for many of the improvements which he promises to inaugurate will obviously be very expensive. A jaded public doubts that government staffs and expenses will really be reduced more than temporarily, if at all. It is not so long ago that the Conservative leader declared himself ready to move into the guaranteed annual income — the end-all welfare measure — until his own party firmly voted it down.

For many voters, then, the decision becomes one of choosing between, on the one hand, a less than perfect administration, but one that has initiated considerable worthy legislation and has demonstrated competence in government, and on the other hand a party which is anxious to attain office but has not shown in its years of opposition any inspired abilities or policies that indicate it will bring to Ottawa an improvement on what we have.

Added to this is the fact that if there is to be another minority government, as might well occur, a Liberal-NDP grouping would no doubt prove more viable and stable than a Conservative-NDP voting bloc. This would permit the country to get some necessary legislation passed before being plunged into another election in hopes of finding a more durable majority government. And finally, a government based on a solid Quebec vote and scattered representation across the country would provide a less divisive situation for Canada than would one which had a wide anglophone backing but virtually no voice from Quebec at all. That could produce a dangerous tension best avoided.

All things considered, including its deficiencies, return of the Liberal government should be the choice most likely to carry Canada through the unsettled times ahead, but a majority government will be necessary if we are to cope adequately with our problems.

Why You Should Use Your Vote

General J. A. Dextraze, chief of the defence staff, recently sent a message to all members of the Canadian armed forces urging them to use their vote on July 8. Some of his words should apply equally well to civilians as to servicemen:

"I want you to reflect upon the great good fortune you enjoy in being citizens of Canada and to exercise what is both your privilege and your responsibility — your right to vote.

"This does not mean merely marking a ballot . . . It means carefully considering the platforms of the parties and the abilities of the party leaders, as well as considering the capabilities and the qualifications of the candidates in your own constituency . . .

"This is a most important occasion; it is the essential core of democracy and freedom . . . indeed it is a process that is crucial to our whole way of life . . .

"Members of the armed forces have fought and many have died, to guarantee you the right to vote in the coming general election. All of us in the Department of National Defence, both military and civilian, devote the best years of our lives to the task of protecting this privilege. It is unthinkable that any of us should now consider it too much trouble to go and vote."

May all Canadians take those words to heart.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Right to Vote

I've been denied my right to vote in the forthcoming federal election. And it would be interesting to speculate how many constituencies across Canada would have different election results on July 8 if people like myself were allowed to vote.

As an armed forces dependant, I am required to be in transit on a move overseas between June 18 and July 10. While legislation allows servicemen in transit to vote in any service poll on any Canadian Forces base en route at the time of the service vote, dependants may vote only as civilians in the riding of their residence. If they have no residence as a result of an armed forces move, that's tough.

Somehow this lack of provision in the Canada Elections Act doesn't seem fair.

Military dependants are not quite civilians. Usually their number of residences is almost as high as their number of years of marriage. Dependent wives have often borne their children under a variety of circumstances which many civilians would not tolerate, and they make a great many personal sacrifices which most civilians wouldn't understand or be willing to accept in their own lives.

To sweep military dependants at election time into a tidy little heap of civilianism is a serious injustice.

Dependants in transit on a duty move should be able to vote at a service poll. While voting at a service poll either in Canada or overseas, they should be able to vote in their own choice of constituency provided that constituency has been previously declared. As the law stands, dependent electors overseas are required to vote in the constituency of the forces member — a place they may know little about and might care about less. Surely dependants in transit and overseas should be able to vote in the constituency of their choice.

I'm writing this letter, not solely out of indignation, and not simply for public information, but to request all armed forces dependants who are concerned about this situation to write their members of Parliament for a correction of this neglect under the law. — (Mrs.) Mary James, Brighton, Ont.

Serious Issues

Recenly, on the air I heard a reporter announce (to no surprise, really) that the crime rate in Canada has taken another jump.

So far our political leaders have done some talking about housing policies and some "goodies" have been promised by all, especially Mr. Lewis who can promise almost everything because his party will not form the next government of Canada.

But from what we read in the press and hear on radio and TV, no leader has come out with some worthwhile statements as to the administration of justice in this country.

Inflation, unemployment, housing, pensions, etc., are, of course, of great importance; but so is the fight against crime and the maintenance of law and order in our society.

All voters should be alert to the fact that this election will cost at least two dollars for every taxpayer: let them get their money's worth.

The PM goes around telling people that Canadians didn't want this election and don't care about it.

Whether the people wanted the election or not, the fact is that they are called to exercise their franchise July 8.

Too many and serious issues are at stake, enough to shake the apathy and indifference of all Canadians; and the just released figures on the cost of living should give everyone some "food for thought." — E. J. Lattes, 303-548 Dallas Rd.

Lack of Facilities for the Handicapped

Having just returned from a visit to my Saskatoon office, I am again struck by the lack of facilities for the physically handicapped in Victoria as compared to the real efforts made by the city of Saskatoon to provide easy access to downtown shopping areas, entertainment centres, et cetera in that prairie city.

Everywhere in Saskatoon one sees wheel-chair crossings and buildings with the "wheel-chair" decal on their doors, signifying that the building has elevators, street-level access, wide doors and proper washroom facilities for those in a wheel-chair. It is apparent that not only have Saskatoon's elected officials made a serious attempt to facilitate the movement of their handicapped citizens around their city, but, that the merchants, particularly in the downtown area, have co-operated in a whole-hearted way in this regard.

Here, in this most beautiful of all Canadian cities where we have the highest percentage of old-age pensioners (many of them handicapped) in Canada, we have made no attempt at all to accommodate those who are physically disabled within our midst. There are no wheel-chair crossings to allow disabled persons to cross our streets in safety, I can't recall ever seeing a "wheel-chair" decal on any public building (although a few medical buildings make the necessary allowances for wheel-chair crossary allowances for wheel-chair patients), and even our university and Camosun College are so poorly designed that a disabled person cannot move about these expensive halls of learning without considerable assistance from fellow, non-disabled students.

Living accommodation for the severely disabled is extremely limited and, despite the pious bleatings of Mayor Pollen and his council, the high-rise apartment blocks that continue to proliferate in our community do so without including suitable accommodation for, in particular, the handicapped person in a wheelchair. Surely, our city council could insist, or, at least suggest, that when a permit for the construction of an apartment building is given the plans for such a building include at least some suitable accommodation for severely disabled persons.

Vancouver has done much better in this regard, admittedly with the help of a federal L.I.P. grant, and it is now possible for that city's "wheel-chair citizens" to move with comparative ease and safety in many of the more congested areas of the city.

As president of a national, professional society concerned with the rehabilitation of handicapped persons, I call upon the mayors and councils of the core municipalities to turn their attention to this problem, and to produce a solution with a minimum of the usual bickering and stalling that generally takes place when politicians are faced with problems that they have difficulty in grasping and are loath to seek advice about. — R. W. Dudley, national president, Canadian Association of Rehabilitation Personnel.

Starving Pensioners?

Poor people, and pensioners in particular — of whom I am one — will be grateful to Dr. Gordon H. Grant for his recent comment: "Pensioners down to two meals a day, one of which is dog food, sit in the darkness to save a few pennies in electric costs."

Dr. Grant is well known and admired for his lifetime work in attention to human suffering and he knows, as we all do, that much of today's suffering is at the empty meal table. He rightly calls attention to the mismanagement of the Trudeau Government who could only add a dollar or two to the pension pittance while squandering millions to waste.

An example we can never forget was the "Bonaventure" scandal where Trudeau and his "trusties" spent $18 millions of taxpayers' money in repairs and then at once sold it for less than a million. The remedy is in the voters hands on July 8. — Clarence Goode, 1840 St. Ann.

MAURICE WESTERN

Problem of the House Divided

OTTAWA — In a recent television interview Duff Roblin, who is now engaged at Peterborough in one of the country's more intriguing individual battles, offered an interesting comment on his party's perennial problem in the province of Quebec.

"I'll give you my theory, and its only a theory, and it's mine and it's only mine, so you'll have to judge it on that basis. But I think that the first step that needs to be taken is to create a provincial Progressive Conservative party in the province of Quebec. We haven't got one at the present time; we haven't had one for years; but it seems to me that is the first step to take, because people in Quebec are very interested indeed in the provincial level of politics, sometimes even more so than in the federal, and it seems to me that until our party is able to establish an intelligent presence as a provincial party, we've got one hand tied behind our back when we come to the federal election."

View Is Shared

In fact, the Roblin view is shared by a good many Quebec Conservatives and has been for a long time. It is a reasonable enough theory but it never seems to be translated into reality. The obstacle of many years — the existence of the Union Nationale — has now been removed but there are still no signs of provincial action, presumably because the Conservatiives have felt compelled to concentrate their scarce resources in the federal field.

If the doors to Quebec had not been barred and bolted, Robert Stanfield would have won easily in 1972. But this was not an unusual experience for a Conservative leader. A Quebec shut-out or something very close to it has been more or less normal since the First World War.

In 21 elections, the province has returned a Conservative majority only once in 1958, that miracle having been more or less arranged for John Diefenbaker by the Quebec overlord of the period, Maurice Duplessis.

It is strange and ironic, given this record, that Quebec has also buried some Liberal hopes, and on more than one occasion.

The usual reasons given for Quebec's estrangement from the Conservatives are, of course, the death of Riel and the 1917 conscription crisis. But since the second of these events occurred more than half a century ago, other considerations must obviously be of contemporary significance. Presumably a more telling point now is the attractiveness of a rival party which has given the country three French Canadian Prime Ministers.

DUFF ROBLIN
. . . Quebec theory

This merely points up the dilemma which will continue to haunt the Conservatives even if Robert Stanfield achieves the modest gains for which he hopes on Monday. How is the party to compete with the Liberals in this field if it cannot develop strong Quebec representation?

Mr. Stanfield, who has always displayed goodwill towards the province, might be well pleased if he could anticipate a French Canadian successor. But where is a candidate of stature to be found if the party must constantly rely on local dissatisfactions to return a few accidentals temporarily to the Parliament at Ottawa?

In 1968 Mr. Stanfield tried to revive the party by enlisting various notables headed by Marcel Faribault, who was well known in business circles but a disaster in politics. In 1972 Claude Wagner attempted to play the role of Quebec lieutenant but only narrowly retained his own seat. Evidently persuaded that such shortcuts will not work, the Conservative leader is now leading his own Quebec campaign.

By dint of hard work, Mr. Stanfield has fielded a full slate of candidates but many of them are not well known. How could they be when no training ground now exists, either in the form of the provincial party recommended by Mr. Roblin, or in the shape of the old Union Nationale? Even the protest vote, in such circumstances, is not easily garnered; it is likely in many cases to be drawn off by Creditistes whose names are more familiar to the public.

Undermines Unity

Such a situation is, regrettably, not conducive to national unity. It means that the second largest cultural group in the country is overwhelmingly identified with one party. To militants of that part east of the Ottawa, "Quebec solide" may have a reassuring ring. How does it sound to people in other provinces?

The Liberals at times, however, have relied rather too much on their rarely shakable base. In 1957 they dropped only five seats (counting a pair of independent Liberals) in the province but that was enough to give John Diefenbaker his narrow lead.

In 1963 and again in 1965 Lester Pearson had every hope of achieving a majority. In the first case, the Conservatives were visibly declining in Quebec (they fell from 14 to 8) and in the second barely holding their ground. But the province that is not like the others decided it had nothing to lose by giving Real Caouette enough seats — although only barely enough — to upset all the careful calculations.

As for the Conservatives, they had one unexampled opportunity in Quebec after 1958. That was frittered away. The problem remains and the only serious proposed solution for the long term appears to be that aired on television by Mr. Roblin.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

By Freeman King

Walk along some woodland trail where you can get away from the normal traffic. Find an old log on some mossy slope. Now just sit down and absorb the wonderful things around you.

Perhaps close by there will be an ants' nest. Just watch these fascinating little creatures. They are always busy. Some you will see climbing up a tall tree, and if you look closely you will find that there is a steady stream, both going up and down. Perhaps they have reached the needles or the leaves of the tree where the aphids live. From these [illegible] animals they collect the food that is so essential to ants. It is called "honey dew."

As you watch and look you will see many little winged creatures. Perhaps you may see one that has a rather long tail or maybe you will see it hover around the trunk of a tree. It could be one of the wood borers looking for a place to deposit her eggs for a new brood.

Perhaps a bee will appear searching for some flower where it can obtain pollen and nectar, and in so doing help to pollinate the flower so in turn it can reproduce seeds. The bee and the flower work in harmony.

Kick the decaying leaves that are at your feet and see what other little animals you can spot. Perhaps a small beetle will scurry away to the dark. What will it be doing? It is one of the breaker downers that help return vegetation back into the soil. In its turn it will provide soil so that plants and animals, including man, may live.

If you listen you will hear many wonderful songs from the birds in the trees overhead. If you are lucky you will be able to identify them by their song. Sit still and soon the little feathered friend will appear on a bush close by. Perhaps it will be a junco or a tiny wren. Remember that you can never be alone in the forest. There is always some other creature present.

As you sit and think of the many different stratas or layers of life around you including those on the ground, those at a slightly higher level and those at the tops of the trees, remember that each has a special purpose in life. Each one is independent, and yet each species is necessary in tying together this great thing that we call life. And without insects and plants as well as the little animals man could not exist.

Yes we live in a complex and wonderful world.

If It's Close, Trudeau Has a Few Options

By ANTHONY WESTELL

OTTAWA—As the signs point to a close election result on Monday, there is already discussion about what happens if the Conservatives win just a few more seats than the Liberals, becoming the largest party but short of a majority.

Will Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau automatically resign so that the Governor-General can invite Robert Stanfield to form a government, or will he seek to remain in office to meet the new House of Commons?

Trudeau is said to have indicated in a recent radio interview that if the margin of the Tory victory were very narrow, he would be inclined to hang on and let the House of Commons decide who should be Prime Minister.

He would have the constitutional right. Under the parliamentary system, we do not elect a Prime Minister, but 264 members of the House of Commons. The House decides, with some help from the Governor-General, in whom it has confidence to run a government.

Trudeau lost the confidence of the last House when his government's budget was defeated. He thereupon asked the Governor-General to dissolve Parliament so that the issue could go to the people in an election. He is asking the people to elect MPs who will support him in the Commons.

If the Liberals are heavily defeated, Trudeau will obviously have lost the confidence of the country as well as of the Commons, and he will go to the Governor-General and resign.

But if the result is very close and the Conservatives have no majority in the Commons, it will be open to Trudeau to suggest to the Governor-General that he wishes to meet the new House and ask for a vote of confidence. The Governor-General would no doubt consent, leaving it to the representatives of the people to choose a Prime Minister instead of arbitrarily sacking Trudeau and sending for Stanfield.

Constitutionally, it would be quite proper for Trudeau to follow that course. Politically it would probably be madness.

If Stanfield wins the largest number of seats, no matter how small the margin of his victory, the public will expect to see him become prime minister. The average citizen will be interested not in the letter of the constitution or the mechanics of the parliamentary system, but in what seems to be simple fair play.

If Trudeau attempted to hold on to power, no matter how sound his constitutional position, he would seem to be a poor loser, a sorehead, perhaps even an enemy of democracy. And if the New Democrats or the Social Credit party voted to keep him in office and to keep Stanfield out, they would appear to be mere servants of the Liberal party.

So in the event of a narrow Tory victory, we can expect Trudeau to hesitate for a few days while he consults his cabinet and perhaps sounds out the minor parties, and then to resign when the political reality becomes apparent.

Stanfield would form his government and presumably seek as quickly as possible to freeze incomes and prices. That would mean summoning Parliament to a special session in August, and now one can speculate about another scenario.

The Liberals, New Democrats and the Social Credit party are all opposed to Stanfield's proposed freeze. So Stanfield, if he had won by only a few seats, would face a hostile majority when he put his program before a new house in August.

The new government might very well be defeated on the first vote of confidence on its economy policy. What would happen then?

Stanfield could follow one of two courses: He could go to the governor-general and simply resign on the grounds that his government did not command the confidence of the Commons; or he could ask the governor-general to dissolve Parliament and call an election to let the people decide.

If he simply resigned, he would have nothing more to say in the matter unless the Governor-General asked his advice. It is commonly said, but wrong, that a retiring prime minister in effect tells the Governor-General what to do. He retires, and gives advice only if it is requested.

In the circumstances we are discussing, the Governor-General would no doubt ask Stanfield for advice, and Stanfield presumably would suggest he call Trudeau and ask him to try to form a government which would command the confidence of the House.

The Governor-General might also ask advice from NDP Leader David Lewis and Social Credit Leader Real Caouette to see if they would be prepared to give a Trudeau government a chance.

Trudeau would have to decide for himself whether to accept the Governor-General's commission to form a government and ask the House for confidence, and he would probably have private talks with the minor party leaders.

The situation would be much more difficult if Stanfield, instead of resigning, asked the Governor-General to call another election. There are some political experts who argue that the Governor-General would have no option but to do as the prime minister asked. Refusal, they say, would open the whole issue of whether the appointed Governor-General or the elected prime minister really runs the country.

But the majority of constitutional experts and most of the politicians who have studied the question now seem to agree that, in fact, the Governor-General would have discretion. He could turn down a request for dissolution on the grounds that as two elections in less than two years had not produced a majority in the Commons, the country should not quickly be put to the annoyance and expense of yet another election, and that MPs should be given a chance to support another government.

The Governor-General would then invite Trudeau to try his luck in the House. To avoid another election, the NDP and the Social Credit members would probably decide to support a Liberal government, at least in the short term.

The point being made here is that when the voters go to the polls on Monday, they may not in fact be choosing a prime minister and a party to form a government. That power resides with the House of Commons.

Liberal and Tory Bagmen Knocking on Same Doors

By GEOFFREY STEVENS
The Globe and Mail

Fund-raising has always been the soft underbelly of the political system, here as elsewhere. Mere mention of the word "bagman" triggers the imagination. Overweight men in expensive vests. Hotel rooms blue with stale cigar smoke. Anonymous brown briefcases and secret safety deposit boxes bulging with cash. Clandestine meetings on park benches. Favors promised. Plain manilla envelopes changing hands. The Pacific Scandal. Fidinam. Watergate.

The trouble with the image is that neither of the two most important political fund-raisers in Canada today — Senator John M. Godfrey for the Liberals and Patrick Vernon for the Conservatives — fits the stereotype of a bagman. They both look like what they both are — successful lawyers and partners in major Toronto law firms, Senator Godfrey in Campbell, Godfrey and Lewtas and Vernon in McCarthy and McCarthy.

Elegant Office

In fact, they work in the same building in the Toronto-Dominion complex. Vernon operates from a small but tasteful office on the 48th floor with off-white broadloom and a stunning view of the Toronto Islands. Senator Godfrey is down on the 36th floor, in a large and elegant corner office with an oriental rug on the floor.

Although neither is a household name, Senator Godfrey, the more gregarious and outspoken of the two, is better known than Vernon, who may well be the most anonymous important figure in politics today, unknown even to a great many Tories. He has courted his anonymity assiduously. His name appears in none of the standard directories. The Globe and Mail library has no file on him. And he has made a point of never, ever talking to the press.

The other day, however, he chatted for an hour in his office about his work as the Conservatives' national finance chairman — a job that makes him responsible for seeing that the party raises the $4.2-million it plans to spend nationally in this election and for personally canvassing nearly 100 of the party's largest corporate contributors.

Vernon bears a slight resemblance to his leader, Robert Stanfield, in both appearance and speech. At 47, he has the same lean figure and receding hairline; the same soft smile and deferential manner. His voice has some of the Stanfield inflection, minus the Maritimes drawl.

He inherited his job as the party's chief fund raiser from one of the senior partners at McCarthy and McCarthy, Beverley Matthews, who had held it for about 20 years. He helped Matthews raise money in the difficult (for the Tories) elections of 1965 and 1968. At the beginning of 1969, Matthews turned the job over to the younger lawyer.

Although there have been rumors for several weeks that the Conservatives are having trouble raising money because of business resistance to Stanfield's policy of price and income controls, Vernon says it isn't so. Collections, he says, are going well — as well as they did in 1972 when the Tories spent $3.9-million. Difficulties occasionally arise if an executive has not been paying attention to the campaign and suddenly discovers what the Conservative policy is. "Then I have to talk a little harder," Vernon says.

$10 Per Employee

There seem to be two cardinal rules in fund-raising: always tell the company president exactly how much you want his firm to contribute, and never promise anything in return. How much to ask for? Mr. Vernon says he looks at three things: the number of employees the company has (a rough rule of thumb is $10 for every employee); gross sales ($1,000 per $2-million in gross sales would be reasonable); and the "bottom line" profit after tax ($5,000 for every $1-million profit would be about right). Vernon balances these three calculations, makes a guess as to how much Jack Godfrey is asking the same company for — there's no point in asking for less — and makes his pitch. He usually has a cheque or pledge within 10 or 15 minutes.

The traditional yardstick among companies supporting the political process has been 60 per cent to the party in power and 40 per cent to the opposition party. Indications are, however, that many companies now are dividing their money equally. "If there still is a differential," Vernon says, "I suspect it's getting less and less — perhaps because we are getting closer and closer to forming the government."

Godfrey raised a record $6.5-million for the Liberal Party in the 1972 election. He was the Liberals' national finance chairman in that election, but he had a heart attack and accepted Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's offer of a Senate seat. In this election, Senator Richard Stanbury, the party's former national president, has the title and paperwork of the finance chairman. This leaves Senator Godfrey free to concentrate on the thing he likes best — the heavy fund raising.

As he moves across Ontario rapping on the doors of chief executive officers, Godfrey is working from a list of what he calls "my special name companies." There are 75 companies on the list and almost all have annual profits in excess of $5-million. These 75 sustain the Liberal Party between elections and are financing the bulk of its 1974 campaign.

It does not trouble Godfrey that his rival, Vernon, is knocking on many of the same doors. The Liberal fund-raiser says — and his assertion is viewed with considerable skepticism by collectors for the other parties — that he always advises contributors to give equally to the two old parties. "I've never told anyone in the six years I've been at this to give to the Liberal Party alone. I tell them to give to the democratic process." He runs his hand through his hair, once red but now grey, and grins. Companies which come up with a cheque for the Liberal branch of the democratic process earn the ultimate Godfrey accolade — "They're very responsible citizens."

Although the Liberals and Conservatives are both concentrating heavily on the corporate sector, the Tory fund-raising seems to be more broadly based. Vernon says he expects about 5,000 firms with more than 100 employees will be canvassed. Godfrey estimates the Liberals will contact about 1,200 across Canada. Companies likely to give less than $1,000 are left to the mercy of local Liberal candidates.

GODFREY
. . . same building

(Every now and again — more frequently in this campaign than in past ones — Godfrey finds that Grit candidate has been soliciting one of his "special name" companies. This makes him mad. "I tell them (companies) to tell them (candidates) to go to hell. They're poaching."

$100,000 Limit

Godfrey always asks for a specific amount based on each firm's profit figures. He says, however, he enforces a limit on the size of contributions. He won't say what it is, but a reasonable guess would be $100,000. He also says that, as a result of the Fidinam scandal in Ontario, he has placed a second, lower ceiling on contributions from developers. He won't say what it is, either.

The Liberals are again aiming for $6.5-million, which would give them $2.3-million more than the Conservatives. The money is coming in on schedule, Godfrey says, but it requires more of a struggle this time. "More people want me to come around personally so that they can give me hell for an hour."

The petroleum and mining companies want to give him hell about the tax changes proposed in the May budget. Other companies want to give him hell about government spending and the growth of the civil service. The latter complaint finds a sympathetic ear. "I can't answer it . . .

Both Leaders Duck Challenge

By RICHARD GWYN

Elections are an exercise in trust. Successful leaders build a link, as much emotional as rational, between themselves and the public. Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield hasn't made that connection. Everyone who knows him takes his integrity and honesty for granted, yet only 18 per cent of Canadians asked by the Gallup Poll which leader was the "most sincere" chose Stanfield, compared to 33 per cent for Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

A poll doesn't decide an election. Undirected anger about the cost of living; western alienation seeking an outlet to express itself; anti-Trudeau feeling, some of it masking hostility toward Quebec; a superior party organization at the riding level; a large bloc of undecided votes that conceals latent Conservative strength. All these factors could combine to elect more Conservative than Liberal MPs.

Such a result would be a defeat for Trudeau, not a victory for Stanfield.

That phenomenon isn't new. The late prime minister Lester Pearson climbed into power upon the ruins of John Diefenbaker's reputation.

Historical coincidences are too neat — exercises in memory rather than explanations of the present. It is also too neat, and certainly too easy, to explain away Stanfield's failure to communicate in the conventional terms of a dull, repetitive campaign style or of his inability to generate drama and excitement.

The contradiction between Stanfield's private reputation and his public image is so profound that the explanation must lie deeper. The cause, I believe, is that in this campaign Stanfield hasn't been able to bring himself to say what he truly believes; also, he hasn't listened enough to what the public has tried to tell him.

Most applause at political rallies is self-generated, a conditioned response to cue-lines like "the next prime minister" or a protective wave that develops when one person starts to clap. One line in Stanfield's campaign-opener in Winnipeg, though, drew a response that was wholly genuine. He said: "We must be prepared to discipline ourselves." The applause was strong and deep, a signal of recognition.

Perhaps Stanfield didn't hear the signal. Perhaps he has judged that, amid affluence, self-discipline is an unsaleable message. Certainly he has never returned to the theme again.

Restraint, of course, is integral to many of Stanfield's problems — price and income controls, the cut-back in government spending. But Stanfield has not cared, or dared, to explain that neither will be painless: reduced spending means less money for worthy causes, and less jobs; controls mean that many will be forced back from the wage and salary levels they could have won on the open market.

Stanfield hasn't told the public the consequences of his policies, nor challenged them to share responsibility for their own economic affairs. He hasn't, in short, trusted the public, nor, so far, received that trust in return.

If elected, Stanfield would be committed to implementing his policy of controls. But without public understanding and support that policy has no chance of success.

"If inflation continues to escalate and becomes part of our social fabric," Stanfield told me in an interview at the end of a long campaign day, "it will become increasingly difficult to get the co-operation needed for any program of restraint, because everyone will be looking out for themselves. This will represent a terrible test for democratic institutions."

Stanfield himself is facing that test as a democratic leader. So far he has failed it.

In elections, politicians try to magnify themselves, to invest the commonplace with importance and to transform cliches into freshminted insights. Prime Minister Trudeau in this campaign has reduced himself: He has exchanged the grace, wit and intellect of a few years ago for the one-dimensional banalities of a conventional politician.

None of the physical grace has changed. He moves through a crowd like a presence. He has a natural royalty. But that isn't the style that makes a man. Instead it is thoughts, and how they are expressed. "I have been across Canada and felt its pulse as it prepares to cast its vote." "NDP Leader David Lewis is driving through life with his horn stuck. He's a political profiteer." If this is style, what has become of the man?

Perhaps it was the setting in which Trudeau spoke, mechanical and remote with his audience stretching away from him into the far stands of Varsity Stadium. Perhaps it was the disappointment of knowing that crucial gamble had failed: The party's best organizers in 28 Toronto-area ridings had been pulled off their jobs for two weeks to produce a crowd which still left huge holes among the 24,000 seats.

The Liberal campaign until this point had been as slick as it was successful. The two qualities reinforced each other. When the success ended, as it did that night, the slickness became tawdry. The scene was the politics of the '50s, Canadian Graffiti: A huge hot-air balloon that dragged at its moorings, marching bands and majorettes, a schedule delayed half an hour in the hope that more people would trickle into the stadium.

By itself, none of this really matters. The morale of party workers was dampened, but every campaign has its ups and downs. There were a cluster of critical press reports on the meeting, but the Liberals traditionally stumble near the finish line.

What matters instead is that Trudeau faced in Toronto his single most important challenge of the campaign — and he ducked it. His audience, of perhaps 14,000, is the largest he will speak to. Through that crowd he was speaking to the voters of the ridings that will decide who forms the next government. This was the occasion, and the opportunity. And Trudeau had nothing to say.

"The cost of living is a serious issue. We have never tried to avoid discussing that problem," said Trudeau. An excellent beginning. One waited for the other shoe to fall. It never did. Trudeau did not again discuss inflation. Instead, he attacked Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield for his price and income controls policy, and Lewis for blowing his horn.

A switch of subject: "What about this guy Trudeau, you are asking. Where does he want to lead the country. I know Canadians are asking themselves that." Again one waited for the second shoe. "I am not asking you to love Trudeau. I am asking Canadians to vote for a strong team."

Trudeau's re-election at present seems probable — unless all the polls are wrong, a circumstance which is itself quite possible. The accomplishment would be almost unprecedented: Few democratic governments have survived an electoral test in the midst of "double digit" inflation; few political leaders have recovered from a setback as severe as Trudeau suffered in 1972.

This achievement, if it comes, will be entirely Trudeau's. In quest of victory he has focussed all his formidable talents upon that single goal. The price he has paid to reach the goal has been to become a total politician, and less than he once was.

First With All the News

By JOHN NICHOL

The key responsibility of the television and radio commentators is to produce reports on big events — fast.

Perhaps you wonder how they do it. Actually most of the material is prepared in advance. Here, for instance, is the post election script prepared in early March for Fergus Barnwell — our man on Parliament Hill. Mr. Barnwell is given optional phrases (shown here in parentheses) to be used under various conditions. Here is how it goes.

Announcer: And now we go to Ottawa for a report from Fergus Barnwell in Ottawa.

Barnwell: "This is Fergus Barnwell on Parliament Hill. Prime Minister (Trudeau, Stanfield) met the press today in his first press conference since his (sweep, close shave) in the recent election. With him was his (beaming, smiling) wife (Margaret, Mary) looking (smart but tired, tired but smart) in a (insert color) (dress, pant suit).

He announced that he (had been to, planned to) call on the Governor-General this (morning, afternoon) for (formal, informal) discussions. The (old, new) cabinet will be sworn in on (insert day and date).

The Prime Minister will leave for a short holiday in (Barbados, Halifax) and will return (insert day and date) to (resume, pick up) the chores of office.

He said that the results of the election reconfirmed his faith in Canada, and the democratic process. He expressed regret that many fine people who had served in the last Parliament would not be back, but was greatly encouraged by all the new M.P.'s of real potential who would sit in the new house.

The first priority of the new (Liberal, Conservative) government would be to tackle the problem of inflation. He (emphatically rejected, strongly endorsed) the policy of price and wage controls, which he said had been the subject of so much (serious, uninformed) debate during the campaign. Beyond that he saw the need for (continued application, swift re-examination) of what he called the (sound, idiotic) policies of the previous government.

He said that he was (greatly encouraged, somewhat disappointed) by the results in Quebec. As for the Prairies, he said that the massive wheat sales and rising farm incomes had (in no way, greatly) reduced the alienation of the West, and the vote showed a strong degree of (trust, distrust) for the (Liberal, Conservative) party.

Noting the (new strength, depleted ranks) of the New Democratic Party, he said that his government would co-operate with all Members of the House to make parliament work for the people of Canada. He said that he (had, had not) met with (Mr. Lewis, Mr. Caouette).

Turning to international affairs, the Prime Minister said that he planned to visit (Washington, London) shortly to discuss (Canada-U.S., Canada-U.K.) relations with (Nixon, Ford, Heath, Wilson) and to reaffirm our ties with (our friends to the South, the Mother Country).

Questioned by reporters as to his proposed staff, he said he (intended to continue to rely on the fine men and women who had served the country so efficiently, throw those empire builders out on their ears).

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Abandoning a crime midway through the act doesn't remove guilt.

Judge William Ostler made the comment in Victoria provincial court Friday in finding Ellery John Littleton guilty of theft under $200.

Littleton, 33, of 2135 Granite, had been charged April 17 with shoplifting three records from Woodwards.

A store detectice testified she watched him pick up the records while he "furtively looked around," and, after he had gone into a washroom to put the records in a bag, followed him as he walked towards one of the store's exits.

However, when he got close to the door he turned back. At almost the same moment the store detective put her hand on his shoulder and said, "You have merchandise on you which you haven't paid for."

She said he replied, "I have decided to come back and pay for them."

Defence counsel Mike Hutchison argued there was insufficient evidence to show intent to steal.

Ostler disagreed, "This was a most unusual, peculiar manner of behavior,"

"It seems clear to me when he reached the door he had a change of heart ... and decided to pay for the goods."

But by then, said Ostler, it was too late. The offence had already been committed.

He remanded Littleton to July 30 for a pre-sentence report as requested by Hutchison.

A rare charge of double doctoring was read against William Paule Murray of the Victoria area.

Crown alleged Murray, 25, had gone to a doctor in Victoria and received a prescription for methadone; then went to a doctor in Duncan and got a prescription for morphine.

Murray had originally pleaded not guilty in Duncan but changed his plea in Victoria to guilty.

Ostler sentenced him to 30 days in jail.

A Toronto youth, Joseph Weglewski, 20, was fined $100 for possession of eight baggies of marijuana.

Gary Leonard Clermont, 27, of 255 Roberts, received a $75 fine after pleading guilty to possessing one baggie of the drug found on him Thursday night on the 12th level of the Yates Street carpark.

Rick Stephen Matte, 715 Snowdrop, received a suspended sentence and was placed on one year's probation.

Matte, 21, had pleaded guilty June 24 to breaking into a residence at 5962 Blythwood last Oct. 13 and stealing a stereo set worth $800.

Ostler ordered the accused pay $105 restitution to C.A.V. Electronic, 758 Yates, which unwittingly purchased one of the component parts of the set.

Dennis Brian McKay, 32, pleaded guilty to possession of a prohibited weapon.

He was charged after police found him early Friday collapsed in the front yard of his home at 17 Dock, and discovered a six inch switchblade in one of his pockets.

McKay explained he had taken the knife off someone in the course of a fight a few days earlier and had "forgotten he still had it."

Ostler fined him $35 and confiscated the weapon.

Death Sentence

ANKARA (AFP) — One man was sentenced to die while death sentences on two others were commuted to long prison terms Friday by a military court, which jailed a total of 19 persons for belonging to the Turkish People's Liberation Army. Mustafa Karadag, accused of being the leader of the group, was to die.

Inquest Set On Woman

An inquest will begin Tuesday into the death of a woman who fell out of a window at the Regency Shields Hotel, 724 Yates, last Monday.

Victoria police said their investigation into the death of Dofothy Moraes, 51, has ended and have turned the matter over to the coroner.

Greater Victoria coroner Edmond St. Jorre said preliminary medical evidence will be heard Tuesday and the hearing adjourned until a Vancouver pathologist's report is completed.

Police believe Mrs. Moraes fell out of a window of a third floor suite which she shared with her husband Gordon Meredith Moraes, 50. She died instantly.

She was found in an inside well still clutching her purse in one hand. A bottle of beer lay unbroken beside her, a spokesman said.

Cosmonauts Hard at Work

MOSCOW (UPI) — Two Soyuz cosmonauts aboard the orbiting Salyut 3 space station have carried out experiments, tested equipment and made a telecast back to earth, the Tass News Agency said today.

Ground controller Yevgeni Khrunov, who took part in the dockings of the Soyuz-4 and Soyuz-5 manned spaceships, said the Soyuz-14 made a pinpoint linkup with its space station.

"High accuracy was achieved with a minimum expenditure of fuel," he said.

Khrunov reported the docking was a rehearsal for next year's space linkup between a Soyuz and an Apollo spacecraft.

The Soviet spacemen checked out their craft's engineering systems and its fuel supply, which comes from solar batteries, Tass said.

It reported that the cosmonauts made their first telecast to earth, but this has not yet been shown on Soviet television.

Tass said the spacecraft's three rooms include a separate recreation area where the cosmonauts take meals, rest and do gymnastic exercises.

Soviet space scientists say they have confidence in the new docking unit aboard the spacecraft, a critical piece of hardware for the joint United States-Soviet space flight scheduled for 1975.

"We have no doubt about its reliability," mission director Alexei Yeliseyev said Friday.

In the 1975 flight, Soviet and U.S. spacemen will dock their craft in earth orbit and exchange visits. The United States is reported to have pressed the Russians to make sure Soyuz is in perfect order.

After the last Soviet space docking with an orbiting lab, in 1971, three cosmonauts died on their return to earth because a hatch valve failed on their Soyuz 11 vehicle.

In the latest Soviet space mission, crew commander Col. Pavel Popovich and flight engineer Lt.-Col. Yuri Artyukhin were reported hard at work aboard Salyut 3.

TALKS DELAYED

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mid-contract talks between the pulp and paper industry and four unions adjourned Friday and were expected not to resume until the coast forest industry and the International Woodworkers of America agree on a new collective contract.

The executives of the United Paperworkers International Union and the Pulp and Paper and Woodworkers of Canada — for many years organization rivals in the industry — and representatives of Electrical and Office Workers began meetings last week with Pulp and Paper Industrial Relations Bureau.

UPIU western vice-resident Pat O'Neil disclosed Thursday that the unions want an increase for mechanics and tradesmen. Mechanics currently make $6.94 an hour under their contract which expires in June, 1975, and the pulp unions want this rate increased to $7.50½ an hour.

PAPERS SETTLE

OTTAWA (CP) — A tentative agreement was reached early today between Ottawa's two English-language newspapers and newspaper unions, spokesmen of both union and management announced.

No details were released, but a union spokesman said a mass meeting is planned Sunday at which the tentative agreement will be studdied. Some clauses dealing with benefits are expected to be ratified at the meeting.

Vancouver Man Killed When Ambush Flops

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police said Friday a man attempting to seek revenge for the death of hs niece was beaten and then shot dead with his own gun after ambushing two men.

The man lay in wait, armed with a shotgun, outside a sawmill where the two men worked early Friday morning.

When the two men emerged, police said, the man opened fire with the shotgun, hitting one of the men. He was then charged by the two, with possibly others involved and was beaten with his own gun and then shot.

Police said the incident began when the dead man's niece was strangled in May in the basement of her home. Her husband, who has been charged with non-capital murder, was related to the two men ambushed.

No charges had been laid late Friday in the shooting.

Police identified the dead man as Gerdev Singh Gill, 44. Treated in hospital for a shotgun wound was Darshan Dhillon, 26. Treated for cuts and released was Mukand Rai, 23.

Halt Violence, Picketers Told

TRAIL (CP) — Striking Cominco Ltd. workers here have been instructed to ensure there are no disturbances on the picket lines pending a hearing next week on whether first-line supervisors are in or out of the steelworkers union.

The order from union officials follows an incident Thursday morning in which cars were dented and aerials torn off as the supervisors went through picket lines on their way to work.

"We've instructed our picketers not to damage the cars and to get out of the way so they don't get run over," Marv McLean, president of the United Steelworkers of America, Local 480, said Friday.

McLean said he has asked picketers to keep things calm until the hearings, scheduled for next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, here, decide the status of the first-line supervisors (shift bosses).

He said the supervisors have been ruled inside the union in Kimberley, and that their crossing picket lines in Trail has caused hard feelings among the striking workers.

The steelworkers have sought to have about 160 Cominco supervisors included within their bargaining unit.

The 2,800 Trail workers, along with about 1,200 Cominco employees in Kimberley and Salmo, walked out at midnight Sunday to back up demands for an improved pension plan and better fringe benefits.

McLean said the main issues are welfare and pensions, but that the two sides are not too far apart on money. Cominco has offered a one-year increase in the base rate from $5.10, and in the tradesmen's rate from $5.55 to $7 an hour.

There are no talks scheduled between the company and the union, and McLean has predicted that the strike will be a long one. However, he says the union is ready to meet with the company any time.

Joli Still Presumed Out Front in Race

Temptation, a 57-foot Tacoma, Wash., yawl was the reported leader Friday in the Victoria-to-Maui race.

Race officials said Temptation was 1,340 miles from the finish of the 2,300-mile race.

Joli, a 61-foot Seattle sloop, had still not reported a position, but was the presumed leader. Thirty-foot sloop Native Dancer from Seattle also had not reported a position.

Race Passage of Bremerton, Wash., and Scaramouche of Seattle were reported in second place, 40 miles behind Temptation. Naknek of Vancouver was 20 miles further back.

The others, in order, were: Midnight Special and Biscuit Eater, Red Dog, Obsession, Tinsley Light, Andante II, Elixis and Namu, Namba, Sea-Ray, Rana, Border Lord, Madhatter, Sea Wyf and Lucy Alice.

Citizen Crunch Monday

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The daily newspaper here, the Citizen, was published on time Friday, but a company spokesman says a continuing work slowdown and a series of study sessions by printers will make publication difficult and perhaps impossible Monday.

The printers may be locked out by the company by then in any case, as 72-hour lockout notice was served on the workers Wednesday. The notice expires today.

Since the Citizen is a five-day-a-week newspaper which does not publish on Saturday, it will not be known until Monday whether the printers, members of the International Typographical Union, Local 868, have been locked out.

The company spokesman said the printers went into a study session at 1:30 p.m. Friday after the paper was put out, and were to remain there until 15 minutes before their quitting time.

Jim Delaurier, a spokesman for the union, said the ITU is planning to publish its own paper in the event of a strike.

Income Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Census Bureau figures show that, allowing for inflation, the average American family's income last year registered a net gain of 2.2 per cent. The bureau reported Wednesday that median income for a non-farm family of four increased to $12,050 in 1973 from $11,120 the previous year. The 8.4 per cent increase, representing the biggest yearly increase since 1969, was offset by inflation estimated at 6.2 per cent.

Indians Divided On Vote

ALERT BAY (CP) — Leaders of the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia rejected a recommendation Friday that B.C. Indians vote Conservative in the July election.

George Jeffrey, first vice-president of the brotherhood, said Friday the Trudeau government has given Indians greater participation in the decision-making process.

Chiefs Forest Walkem and Victor Adolph, members of the union's executive committee, recommended Wednesday that B.C. Indians vote Tory.

MOWER CORD OLD

TORONTO (CP) — A Toronto man electrocuted Thursday while cutting his lawn was using a relatively-new electric lawnmower, but the extension cord attached to it was an old one, a Toronto coroner said Friday.

Coroner A. E. Noble, who performed the autopsy on Joe Tassone's body, said Tassone died when 110 volts of electricity grounded in his chest.

"The ground wire had come off and dropped against the positive line in the plug and it carried the full voltage to the lawnmower," Noble said. "The wet grass made a perfect ground and it short-circuited."

Dr. Noble said that people should check plugs before use, adding that electric mowers are not necessarily hazardous if used carefully.

Advance Rulings Help Planning

YOUR TAXES

By I. H. ASPER

Although Canada is still a long distance from having an appropriate advance tax ruling system, there are indications that progress is being made. The government's decision to publish its advance tax rulings is a major step forward in helping taxpayers and their advisers in understanding and coping with the still new and relatively untested tax reform laws.

The concept of advance rulings is still new in Canada, alothough it has been practised for many years in the United States.

Under such a system, the taxpayer who is about to embark on a transaction can go to the tax department, lay out all the relevant facts, and obtain a ruling as to what will be the tax consequences. This can be invaluable for business in that it can prevent tax surprises from arising after it's too late to do anything about it.

For instance, if the shareholders of company X are about to accept a takeover bid for company Y, they can apply to th revenue for a ruling on what the taxes may be arising from the sale. Because of the compexity and uncertainty of the new law, this is often advisable. If they don't like the ruling they can still proceed with the sale, because the ruling isn't binding — but at least they do so knowing in advance how the department may attempt to tax them.

Until now, there have been three major flaws in the advance ruling system, first, the government is not required to make an advance ruling; it is purely optional, at the department's discretion. Second, the rulings, when made do not bind the tax court —they are free to upset them in a later trial. Moreover, there is no appeal from an adverse ruling. And third, those rulings which were made, were not made public for all taxpayers who might be saved making errors if they had known the department's attitude in similar cases.

It is this latter defect which will now be corrected. Commencing immediately, the government will be publishing, and mailing to interested tax watchers, advance income tax rulings it makes and which are considered to be of general interest.

The decision as to what will be published will be based on whether the point under consideration is of broad concern rulings, when made, do not and hasn't been previously interpreted by the courts or the tax department.

In order not to discourage taxpayers from applying for advance rulings for fear their confidential affairs will be disclosed when the ruling is published. the government has wisely declared that it will not mention names. locations and type of business involved so as to disguise the identity of the taxpayer involved.

As an added safeguard to taxpayer anonymity, before a ruling is published, a draft will be sent to the taxpayer who applied for it, to make certain he is satisfied that no confidential material is inadvertently included which would identify him.

Where the proposed transaction is in process, the ruling will not be published until the deal has been completed.

The government policy statement is emphatic in restating that taxpayers should not necessarily regard a published advance ruling as being a continuing statement of the government's interpretation of the tax rules. That is, the published rulings will be mainly an insight into the thinking of tax officials, but if a taxpayer wants a genuine ruling in his own situation, he will still have to apply directly to the tax department.

This improvement in the system is welcome. It is no secret that many tax authorities regard the wording of the new Income Tax Act as neargibberish, incapable of rational interpretation, without resort to psychoanalysis. It is true that throughout his tenure Finance Minister John Turner has been striving manfully to re-write the most incomprehensible aspects, but it will be many years before the legislation is elevated to a state of coherency. Publication of advance rulings at least reduces the uncertainties.

Perhaps the government will next move to cure the other defects in the advance ruling system. It should begin by making them mandatory once a taxpayer requests one. One should not have to commit a crime first before he is told that what he is doing is a crime. He should be able to walk into his friendly neighborhood police station and be told in advance.

The same with the tax consequences of his proposed acts, particularly when few professional advisers can tell him with any confidence.

Once it is accepted that the taxpayer should be entitled, as of right, to an advance ruling, it should also follow that if he doesn't agree with the bureaucracy's ruling, he should have the right to appeal that decision to a higher authority. That's a hallmark of Anglo-Canadian justice.

While we are waiting for further improvements, all should celebrate the present advance. For tax watchers, the soon to be published periodical rulings will make instructive reading. Anyone wishing to be put on the mailing list should so advise the Information Services Branch, Department of National Revenue, 875 Heron Road, Ottawa, K1A 0L8.

FINLAND TO HALT NEWSPRINT EXPORTS

HELSINKI (UPI) — Finnish paper producers will cease exporting newsprint to the United States beginning Jan. 1, 1975, because of the high cost of production and freight charges, Thomas Nystein, director of the Finnish Paper Mills Assn. said today.

Nysten said, "Our newsprint costs in Finland plus our freight charges make our costs much higher than they are for Canadian producers and we just cannot compete at the current level." He returned from a trip Thursday to the United States informing American clients of the decision.

J. A. Peller, company president, said the increase in earnings was caused by the inability to increase prices in face of rising costs.

Weekly Publishers Hard-Pressed for Paper

DUNCAN (CP) — Andy Bigg publishes two weekly newspapers in this area, the heart of British Columbia's booming pulp and newsprint country and you would think obtaining paper would be the least of his worries.

Yet a few weeks ago he rented a truck, drove to the United States, bought 6½ tons of newsprint from a U.S. publisher and brought it back to Canada.

The rolls bore the MacMillan Bloedel insignia and were produced in B.C., possibly at the firm's Harmac plant, 20 miles from Duncan.

Bigg, who prints for nine other weekly newspapers at the Victoria Pictorial News Ltd. plant in nearby Victoria, says his inability to obtain sufficient quantities of newsprint has forced him to turn away $7,000 worth of additional business in the past two months.

His regular supplier, Crown Zellerbach Canada Ltd., has placed him on a monthly allocation of 71 tons and will not sell him more. Bigg says the quota was based on last year's consumption of 252 tons.

"I now need at least 400 tons a year," he said.

Bigg said he wants to speak out on the plight of small newspaper publishers but he is afraid of retaliation. He says it is ironic that while the majority of his readers are in the pulp and paper industry, newspapers cannot obtain sufficient supplies of paper.

In two recent editorials in his Cowichan Leader, Biggs argues that the lumber companies must supply the communities as a matter of principle and fairness.

He says he is willing to pay the going rate for newsprint, which "is in the area of approximately $20 per ton more than is being paid for the same B.C.-produced newsprint in New York."

Bigg suggests 15 per cent of the total newsprint production be kept for the domestic market in Canada.

He says he has been contacted by two other B.C. publishers who are interested in buying newsprint from Russia.

John Damgaard, publisher of the thrice-weekly Victorian, has tried to buy supplies from Sweden. Although he offered $750,000 for 3 tons, there were no sellers.

Damgaard says his present quota forces him to forage month-by-month for supplies to expand his business.

Another hard-hit publisher is Vic Cameron, of the Weekly Nanaimo Times. He has ordered an $86,000 press from San Francisco to start printing himself, but has approached the major forest product companies and the B.C. government to obtain newsprint without success.

The result is Cameron doesn't know when he can take delivery of his new press.

The paper companies say they're sympathetic, but there's little to be done.

Vitamins, in Large Quantities, Flush Out Drugs

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

Jay Hyder was a drug user.

Now off drugs, he takes 9,000 milligrams of niacin (vitamin B-3) a day and says he feels great.

He and five other young ex-drug users are so convinced of the importance of vitamins and nutrition to people recovering from drug habits they've started a new agency, Back to Living, to spread the word.

The agency, an Opportunities for Youth project funded by a $8,382 federal grant for the summer, operates from noon until midnight every day from headquarters on Fisgard Street across from the police station.

They try to warn users who will listen what drugs — illegal or prescription — do to their bodies and minds, and to advise them on key vitamins and minerals to repair damage caused by drug use.

"When you use drugs you deplete your vitamins and minerals beyond the amount that can be replaced by normal eating," Hyder said in an interview.

Also, drug users live on candy bars and junk food, he said, so many suffer from early symptoms of malnutrition, such as bizzing in the ears, mood changes and hallucinations.

And for months after they stop using drugs, many suffer from the "drug wipeout syndrome," a vague collection of symptoms that leave them physically and psychologically depressed, Hyder said.

The Back to Living group believe that a high protein diet and megavitamin treatment can ease these symptoms.

Niacin is a key vitamin, they say. Hyder takes 9,000 milligrams a day, but he says some people take as much as 130,000 mg. because their bodies need more.

To counteract the "drug wipeout" sickness they recommend a high protein "healing diet" of around 90 usable grams of protein a day.

That's a lot of protein — one egg has only 8 usable grams, an eight-ounce steak 50 grams.

The treatment closely follows the megavitamin treatment of schizophrenics pioneered by Saskatoon's Dr. Abram Hoffer. Hoffer has found niacin the key vitamin in treating schizophrenics.

The six Black to Living workers were brought together this spring by the Victoria branch of the Canadian Schizophrenia Association, a group which has been promoting Hoffer's work.

They see similarities between the "spaced out" symptoms of ex-drug users and those of schizophrenics.

Another supporter of the group is local social worker Ray Ferris. He said many drug users started using drugs to escape emotional or psychological problems, problems that might respond to orthomolecular treatment — the right vitamins and minerals.

Hyder's group also recommends niacin to drug users suffering a "bad comedown" from LSD or other psychedelic drugs. A few grams of niacin can shorten an acid trip by hours, he said.

Minerals such as calcium and magnesium can help alleviate the pain of someone coming off speed (amphetamines), he said.

As for heroin, the best method is eating nothing but drinking lots of water, said Hyder.

"Four days is enough to flush the junk out of your system."

With people coming off barbiturates (called downers), the only thing is to get them to the hospital fast, he said. Barbiturate withdrawal is highly dangerous and many addicts die from accidental overdoses.

The group opposes all drugs, from marijuana to heroin and cocaine, and they know them from experience.

"One of us has been strung out on heroin, one on speed, others have been over the 500 (trips) mark in LSD," Hyder said.

People who have come to them for help range in age from 17 to 40. They know there are many younger kids using every kind of drug, but few have yet sought their help in getting back to normal.

"When they get down that young they really don't have much discretion at all," Hyder said. "They'll pop anything."

Commonly-prescribed sedatives like Valium and Mandrax are easily obtained on the illegal market, he said.

Kids take Valium and beer together, not seeming to realize the danger of combining them. And Mandrax is especially dangerous, Hyder said, because users need increasingly more of the drug to get high so they almost inevitably reach the overdose point.

The OFY grant runs from mid-May to the end of August, and after that the group doesn't know what will happen.

"If we were duplicating a service we wouldn't worry," Hyder said, but he feels they're unique in Greater Victoria.

Suite Designers Slam Pro-Architect Plan

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Victoria city council has been accused of encouraging a "closed shop" situation by proposing that all condominiums built in Victoria must be designed by qualified architects.

At present the majority of apartment and condominium projects are designed by three or four design firms, which have no architects among their staff, but if city council accepts a recommendation of its planning committee that practice will have to end.

And the enforcement of the policy, designer Gary Bentham said Friday, could well put firms like his out of business.

Indicating he will try to express strong objections to the proposal before council's caucus session next Tuesday, Bentham said he is now working on a $2.5 million project "which could go right down the tube" if the city shuts the door to designers.

"What is going to happen is that there will be a closed shop for architects in Victoria. Engineers and designers will not be allowed to submit plans," he noted.

Bentham said in the three years since he established his business he has designed several apartment buildings in the Victoria area, and he has no reason to feel ashamed of any of them.

"I know the ground rules. I know how to make a building look good without putting gingerbread on it," he said.

"Sure, some designers may do an excellent job while others do a poor job, but the same applies to architects."

He said his own professional background is one of comprehensive architectural experience in the European meaning of the term, a three-year course in architectural technology supplemented by 10 years' practical experience in various fields of construction, including surveying and estimating.

"If it were not for the good draftsmen and good designers working for architects they would not go very far," he remarked. "In my case, if I was put out of business I might have to work for an architect, and then I'd be doing exactly the same work I'm doing now while he gets paid for it."

Bentham said another objection to the architects-only policy is that it could act as a deterrent to residential development, because "most development firms can't afford to put up a building with six to eight per cent taken off for architect's fees."

He said he supports the general principle of design controls for apartment development, but plans should be considered strictly on their merits rather than imposing a blanket exclusion of certain practitioners in the design field.

If restrictions have to be laid down, he added, they should relate to accepting plans from "approved" sources, whether they be architects, professional engineers or design consultants.

Another designer, Ted Lunt, told the Times Friday he had only just learned of the recommendation to council. He would only say that he is concerned at the suggested policy, and he will be represented in opposing it before council.

At city hall in recent months there have been complaints from aldermen about the design of apartment and condominium buildings, particularly with regard to their boxlike uniformity.

Architect David Hambleton, chairman of the city's advisory design panel which scrutinizes the plans for all major projects from the design viewpoint and recommends changes where they are considered necessary, proposed the architects-only policy which was endorsed by the planning committee earlier this week.

He has noted that buildings can conform to all zoning, technical and safety requirements yet still be esthetically undesirable.

Because a number of unsatisfactory plans come before the panel, requiring several meetings and numerous suggestions for improvement, Hambleton says there is a tendency for the panel members to be used as a free design service.

A city hall source said panel members on occasion have been irritated to find that certain plans required unnecessary attention and effort by the panel, "simply because the designers didn't seem to understand the changes and improvements that were needed."

MOTEL ROBBED

Between $150 and $200 was taken shortly before noon today when a man entered the Thunderbird Motel, 600 Douglas, and rifled a cash drawer.

Manager John Maurice Ouellett saw the man reach into the draw and chased him several blocks before the thief got away.

A spokesman for the motel said the person must have known where the money was kept.

Flying Squad Hits the Blues In Hospital

Watts and Gain move Hendrick Schuyff

Victoria General Hospital has hired about 25 young people this summer are not only helping staff but waging a winning campaign with patients against the hospital blues.

The blues can be partly a matter of loneliness, partly boredom, because hospital is something like jail — isolated from the outside world.

But the patients are being given a lift, in more ways than one, by the hospital's so-called "flying squad," four hustling young men who wheel them hither and yon for examination or treatment.

Then there are the young women and men, most 19 to 20 years old, who challenge them at cribbage, chess, checkers or cards, provide what's needed for leatherwork or just chat about this or that.

The "flying squad" of patient porters is a pilot project to determine if nurses can be relieved of the time-consuming task of moving patients, leaving them more time for nursing.

Squad members also make beds, says Barbara Burke, the hospital's director of nursing.

Others among the young summer help are developing and evaluating a distribution system aimed at making sure supplies arrive on the nursing units at times and in amounts needed.

It's generally accepted that most people confined to hospital suffer in some degree from loss of contact with the outside world, Burke says.

So four of the young people are serving as "occupational diversional therapists" in a project to measure the usefulness of this sort of assistance. Besides the card games and chitchat, they have shown movies and organized music sessions. Simple leatherwork is popular.

Nurses report that elderly patients who had shown signs of withdrawal and regression have greatly improved and look forward eagerly to visits from the students, Burke says.

Younger patients, especially in their late teens and early twenties, have shown they can accept their stay in hospital more readily if they have something to occupy their time. This is the group enjoying the leatherwork and other hand crafts.

Burke says nurses have long recognized the need for the kind of therapy the young people are providing but because of many other duties have often been unable to provide it.

A grant of $48,000 from the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service enabled the hospital to hire the summer helpers and the hospital staff is enthusiastic about the work they are doing, she says.

"We'll be sorry to see them go in the fall."

It's Cheaper to Dig Than Link Up Mains

A Metchosin family has given up the fight to get water piped to their home by the Greater Victoria Water District.

Pat Ridley, of 4912 William Head Road, said Friday she and her husband Larry had finally decided against spending the quoted amount of more than $2,000 to have the water line brought another 250 feet to their property line.

"We'll go ahead and build another well," Mrs. Ridley said.

The Ridleys moved to their two-acre home 14 years ago, dug one well and have been trying to get a water district line brought in since then.

The well serves the family for most of the year, but during the dry months the water supply often runs short.

All of the Ridley's neighbors have district water but the line stops 250 feet from their property line.

A recent letter from Mayor Peter Pollen, also chairman of the Greater Victoria Water District, indicated the price of the line extension was high because of inflation.

"We still think this is just a pile of nonsense," Mrs. Ridley said today.

"We'll drill a well and if they ever decide to bring the water line down as far as our place they can go ahead, but we won't be paying for it.

"The well will be a high initial expense but it's not as high as the water board price."

Payments on the $2,000 water line would be spread over six years, but the estimated price of about $400 for a 40-foot well similar to the Ridley's present well must be paid in a lump sum.

Hong Kong Vets Gather in City

About 150 veterans of the Second World War Battle of Hong Kong will gather in Victoria, July 11-13 for their annual convention.

The men belonged to either the Winnipeg Grenadiers or the Royal Rifles of Canada regiments and were all captured on Christmas Day, 1941, and held prisoner by the Japanese.

Saanich Mayor Ed Lum will open the convention Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Ingraham Hotel.

The veterans will conduct a business session Friday and see the film, Lost in Error, the only film made of the battle.

The veterans will hold a parade and memorial service at the Cenotaph in front of the legislative buildings Saturday at 10 a.m.

Maj.-Gen. George Pearkes will take the salute in front of the Empress Hotel.

The parade will be led by the 16th Scottish pipe band.

Every province in Canada will be represented at the convention. Kate Christie, one of the nursing sisters who was with the men during their imprisonment, will attend from Toronto. Another of the veterans expected is Charles Edwards, now the mayor of Grand Falls, Nfld.

After the Politicking, a Sealed Box

MR. CANDIDATE MAY promise us voters the moon on a silver platter. He may be sincerity itself or an honest-john fox with an eye on the pay and perquisites that go with a seat in the House of Commons. But when the poloticking is done — when the last appeal has been made and the final denunciation uttered — the election trail ends at a sealed steel box with a slot in its top of a size to accommodate a folded ballot.

When it comes to the selection of our representatives, we the people have the last word. Eventually, I suppose the process by which we register our choices will be dehumanized. We will yank on a lever as if playing a slot machine, and the computers will take over from there. Until that time arives, the apparatus by which Canadians throw the rascals out and install the good guys in office will remain as we have it today.

The foursquare ballot box, hedged about by a set of federal regulations that leave no loopholes for whim or chance.

The ballot itself, secret and anonymous — taken for granted by the voter, but not easily now.

The screen, the pencil on its string, the seals, the forms, the envelopes that reduce the taking and the tallying of your vote to a standarized drill in every polling station.

As a voter, I like to know that at Tuktoyuktuk and Antogonish, Boisevain and Campbell River, there is neither regional disparity nor special concession on election day. Our views differ. Some of us vote for the party, others for the man. The polling station may be a trading post or city school gymnasium. But election procedures are identical to the least detail.

There is also the human equation. Standardized apparatus and regulations to cover every contingency are all very well, but they must have people to make them work. I've observed any number of elections, and it never fails to amaze me how efficiently ordinary men and women serving in their home neighborhoods as deputy returning officers and poll clerks carry out their assignments.

I've heard it claimed that there's nothing like a spell of jury duty to provide a basic understanding of our judicial system. By the same token, I could wish for every adult an election day spent as deputy returning officer or poll clerk.

These two, sworn into government service for the occasion, work as a team with the DRO in charge. They are on the front line of the election, the guardans of your ballot and as such they meet the voter in all his aspects.

Their working day begins well before the polls open and is by no means over when the last voter has dropped his ballot. It is a day keyed to the peculiar rhythms of an election, marked by busy spells and lulls, and likely to become more than a trifle frantic before it ends.

The first voters to arrive are men and women who wish to cast their ballots early and have stopped by on their way to work. They provide a brisk but brief warmup for the polling station crews.

Through the forenoon and into the afternoon, the pace tends to be more leisurely and the voters older. Retired couples, veterans of numerous elections, put in to go through a familiar routine and depart with an air of duty done.

In the middle and late afternoon there's a sending of young housewives, their chores of the earlier day finished, children napped, and no need to be thinking about dinner preparations for a spell. Oftener than not, these voters bring their kids with them: many a halfpint Canadian gets his first glimpse of the electoral process from his mother's arm.

The pace quickens as jobholders interrupt the trip home from work to vote. But there are still plenty of names on the deputy returning officer's list, and the experienced DRO recognizes any slight dinnertime lull as no more than the calm before the storm.

The big rush begins after dinner, and builds to its climax in the half hour before the polls close. It is then that DRO and poll clerk — checking names, passing out ballots and dealing with the inevitable side-issues as they arise — may wish they had four hands apiece instead of the regulation two.

Then, abruptly, the rush is over. The last ballot is in the box, the last voter gone, and the polls closed. What remains is strictly-regulated detail, to be carried out under the watchful eyes of the party scrutineers.

Only when the ballot box has been delivered to the district returning oficer is the polling station team free to turn its attention to the wider election picture.

Who won, who lost in what riding, and how did it all turn out?

MARINA WILLING TO BEND

The developers of the proposed marina in Saanichton Bay will do whatever Central Saanich council asks in order to calm residents' fear on the effects of the marina, Bob Wright said Friday.

Wright, a co-owner of Saanichton Bay Marina Ltd., said he wasn't sure exactly what the "social impact assessment study" requested by council Tuesday was, but said it would be carried out.

"I expect to find out soon just what it is and then we'll go ahead with it.

"If this is what they want, then we'll do it."

Wright said he felt the plans for the 1,200-berth marina were good, but "if the impact study says it's not good then it won't go in."

The project has come under fire from some residents, the East Saanich Indian band and ecology groups.

"I think what we'll do is tell council to pick someone themselves to do the study and then we'll pay for it. That way it will be completely impartial."

Connors Cruises Past Rosewall

LONDON (AP) — Jimmy Connors crushed 39-year-old Ken Rosewall 6-1, 6-1, 6-4 in the men's singles final today and joined his fiancee, Chris Evert, as a Wimbledon tennis champion.

Miss Evert won the women's singles title by beating Olga Morozova of the Soviet Union 6-0, 6-4 Friday.

The 21-year-old Connors, of Belleville, Ill., simply overwhelmed the veteran Aussie with well-placed serves and blistering ground strokes.

Connors changed tactics for the championship match. He forced Rosewall into a duel of groundstrokes by holding back instead of rushing the net at the first opportunity, then after several exchanges he would rush the net.

In the second set Connors remained at the baseline after his serve, on the theory that Rosewall's service return was the Australian's best shot. Rosewall had little chance to try passing shots, and Connors wore him down with sharply hit groundstrokes.

GOT BREAK

In the final set, Rosewall double-faulted to give Connors a break.

But the Australian, a strong favorite here, broke right back and then held his serve 2-1 as he tried desperately to stave off defeat.

Connors saved three breakpoints to hold serve and even the set at 2-2, and then took the lead by breaking service as Rosewall again had problems with his first service.

Each player held his next two services and Connors led 5-4 and served for the match.

Connors took a 15-0 lead when Rosewall hit a volley out. The American ran it to 40-0 when he scored on a forehand volley and Rosewall missed a baseline shot.

BACKHANDS SCORE

Rosewall then saved match point twice by scoring on two backhand passing shots before Connors won the championship with a second serve that Rosewall put into the net. The match lasted only 90 minutes.

The loss was a bitter disappointment for Rosewall, who has never won a Wimbledon title despite being in the final four times, the first time 20 years ago when at 19 he lost to 33-year-old Jaroslav Drobny.

The Duke of Kent, cousin of the Queen, presented the silver Challenge Cup, symbol of the All-England tennis title, to Connors.

Connors held the cup aloft toward where Miss Evert was sitting in the stands.

The two champions will take the traditional first dance at the Wimbledon Ball tonight.

Peggy Michel of the U.S. and Australia's Evonne Goolagong won the women's doubles after they rallied for a 2-6, 6-4, 6-3 victory over Australians Helen Gourlay and Karen Krantczke.

The new champs reached the final by trouncing the Evert - Morozova partnership 7-5, 6-2 while the Aussies beat Americans Julie Anthony and Mona Schallau 9-8, 6-2.

Australians John Newcombe and Tony Roche, seeded fourth, won the men's doubles title, 8-6, 6-4, 6-4, over the third-seeded pair of Stan Smith and Bob Lutz of the United States.

It was the fifth doubles crown for Newcombe and Roche, who reached the final by downing defending-champions Connors and Ilie Nastasie of Romania 3-6, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2, 6-4.

SCALPING SOPHISTICATION

MUNICH (Reuter) — Soccer World Cup ticket scalpers Friday were contemplating the fortunes that were coming their way as prices rocketed in advance of Sunday's final between West Germany and Holland.

For $11.80 tickets scalpers were getting $590 and prices are expected to go higher before game time.

But gone are the days of furtive little men hustling tickets on street corners. Munich's ticket scalpers are more sophisticated.

They use newspaper advertisements simply stating: "World Cup final tickets. Ring . . ."

Gone too are the days when a buyer could bargain. Today's scalpers have hired efficient glib-tongued secretaries who smartly rebuke bargain-hunters with: "That's the price sir, if you are not interested don't waste my time."

One 12-year-old schoolboy manning the phone for his older brother confessed: "I didn't go to school today so that I coulp help Heinz with the business."

But he was unmoved by pleas to lower the $590 price.

"Listen, mein herr, the Dutch will pay that price easily, it's only we would rather a German gets the ticket."

How some of the big scalping concerns obtained their seemingly endless supply of tickets is still a riddle to organizers since Munich citizens had to line up for up to 14 hours to buy two tickets each at the beginning of this year.

Late Surge by Cubans Nips Canadian Squad

SAN JUAN, P.R. (UPI) — Cuba edged Canada 80-79 in a qualifying-round thriller in the seventh world amateur basketball championship Friday night. Both teams qualified for the finals which open Sunday.

Canada held a 46-42 advantage at halftime.

Cuba came from behind in the final three minutes with a 14-point spurt that overwhelmed the flagging Canadians. Alejandro Ortiz slammed in a layup for the victory margin.

The Canadians disrupted the Cuban rhythm of play in the first half by alternating man-to-man and zone defences, and exploited their superior height. Bill Robinson hit for 16 points, 12 of them in the first half, most of them from outside, James Russell got 14 points in the first half for a total of 17. Phil Tollestrup led the Canadians with 18.

Alejandro Urguelles paced Cuba with 23.

Qualifying for the final round, in which play starts Sunday night, were Brazil, Canada, Cuba, Spain, U.S.A., U.S.S.R. They will be joined by host Puerto Rico and defending-champion Yugoslavia, who went directly into the finals.

Sunday's games will pit Spain against U.S.S.R; Brazil against Yogoslavia, and Puerto Rico against the United States.

In other results Friday night, Brazil downed the winless Republic of Central Africa 94-54; U.S.S.R spanked Mexico 95-80; Spain whipped the Philippines 117-85 in a foul-marred contest, and Czechoslovakia nipped Australia 89-84.

The United States hammered Argentina 109-86.

Dope Charge Denied

MUNICH, West Germany (Reuter) — A row about a referee's assignment and allegations of doping rocked the World Cup soccer scene Friday on the eve of a weekend which will see new champions crowned at the Olympic Stadium here.

England's Jack Taylor was named referee for Sunday's final between Holland and West Germany, but Scotsman Bob Davidson said he had been told he had the job.

Dutch officials said several Brazilian players were doped in Wednesday's crunching match at Dortfund where Holland won 2-0 oer the defending champions.

Davidson said he was told Thursday that he had been chosen to referee the final. He and Taylor have been sharing the same room at Munich's Arabella Hotel.

"I am most surprised and disappointed and don't want to take any further part," Davidson said as he prepared to fly home, adding that he planned to put all the facts before the Scottish Football Association.

The Dutch team's doctor, Fritz Kessel, meanwhile, told reporters that some of the Brazilians in Wednesday's match played as if doped.

"Instead of testing two players from each side for drugs, they should have tested all four Brazilian defenders," he said.

But a spokesman for the International Football Federation's doping commission said the routine dope test on two Brazilian players after the match was negative.

Holland, favored to win, was still at the Hiltrup camp the team has used throughout the tournament and will not fly to Munich until today.

The Dutch remain hopeful that winger Rob Rensenbrink, who tore a thigh muscle against Brazil, will be fit, but veteran Piet Keizer stands by in the hope of winning his 33rd cap.

Dolphins Uncertain

By The Associated Press

Thirty-five Miami Dolphin veterans failed Friday to reach a decision on what to do about a player strike during a meeting with leaders of their union.

Miami tight-end Jim Mandich said after meeting officials of the striking National Football League Players Association that he will cross any picket line and will be at camp July 14, the date Dolphin veterans are scheduled to report.

But Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFLPA, said in Miami that at least 20 veterans of the Super Bowl-champion Dolhins would pocket the opening of that team's training camp Sunday, when 48 rookies and non-regular veterans are expected to report.

Meanwhile, the second picket line of the strike was to be set up today at Sam Houston State College in Huntsville, Tex., site of Houston Oilers' training camp for rookies and free agents. Team officials said 104 players were expected in camp.

"Any rookie too dumb to report to camp is too dumb to play for the Oilers," said Sid Gillman, coach and general manager.

Garvey and other leaders of the players' union met in Miami with the Dolphin veterans Friday night.

Afterward, Mandich said: "Nothing in the meeting made me change my mind about not going along with the strike. I am very tired of the business end of football."

Other veterans, including linebacker Bob Matheson and centre Jim Langer, said they still hadn't decided what to do, while placekicker Garo Yepremian said he will go along with whatever the majority of his team-mates decided.

Perfect Effort Marks Opener

Dave Jones had things his own way in the opening game of the 13-year-old Babe Ruth area baseball tournament.

The strong-armed right-hander came up with a perfect game Friday to lead Esquimalt-Victoria to a 12-0 romp over Central Saanich.

Jones struck out 12 of the 15 batters he faced in the five-inning affair and accounted for two other putouts. The other putout was on a grounder as Central Saanich batters failed to get the ball out of the infield.

Defending champion Cosmopolitan-Gordon Head plays Saanich Evening Optimists at Bullen Park as the four-team, double-knockout tournament continues.

Winners of the Bob Sproule Memorial Trophy will represent the Victoria area in the provincial championship July 16-21 at Kelowna.

NEW EVENT AND BARELY MEET RECORD

DURHAM, N.C. (UPI) — A new "event" was introduced Friday during the U.S.A.-U.S.R. track and field meet — the nude running of the 125-yard dash topped off with a high jump.

An unidentified male streaker came out of the stands and amused the crowd of 27,000 at Wallace Wade Stadium by taking off across the infield area. He finished his jaunt by leaping over a temporary fence erected for the meet.

As the streaker fled into a tree-filled area, the public address announcer credited him with a meet record.

Inn's Handyman Fixes It in 12th

The handyman on the Century Inn roster proved it Friday night.

Keith Heppell broke up a Stuffy McGinnis Men's "Softball League marathon Friday at Heywood Avenue Park with a leadoff homer in the bottom of the 12th inning to give Century a 2-1 victory over Seaboard Construction.

The blow by Heppell, who has caught, played three other infield positions as well as in the outfield for manager Jim Buchan, gave Bill Polz his 10th pitching triumph and reduced first-place Seaboard's margin to a game and a half.

TRIUMPH FOR AMISS; SAD DAY FOR INDIANS

BIRMINGHAM (Reuter) — England's cricketers, after getting out a dispirited Indian side for 165 Friday, raced to 117 for no loss on the second day of the third and final test match.

England, already two up in the series, looked in command as openers Dennis Amiss and David Lloyd both hit half centuries against lacklustre Indian bowling.

For Amiss the day contained a personal triumph — when he hit his 47th run he had made 1,000 runs in test cricket this year.

For the Indian side, it was a miserable second day, the first having been washed out by rain.

Four of their batsmen failed to score a run and the first wicket, that of Sunil Gavaskar, tumbled with the first ball of the day from Geoff Arnold.

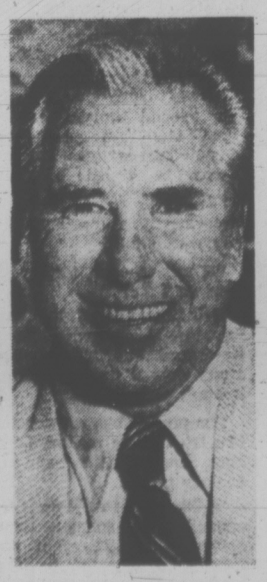
'Wanted' List Complete



PHIL MALONEY

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Vancouver Canucks came to town Friday to say hello to their new training-camp hosts and to announce four players have agreed to new terms with the National Hockey League team.

There was no news in the introduction but the four signees became five before Canucks' press conference in the Imperial Inn wound up.

General manager and coach Phil Maloney's tidbit was the declaration that Greg Boddy, Dan Brady, Harold Snepts and Andy Spruce have signed contracts.

But before he finished his lunch, Maloney was able to announce that holdover centre Chris Oddliefson, obtained last season from Boston Bruins in a trade for Bobby Schmautz, also was back in the fold.

Oddliefson, said Maloney, signed a five-year contract — the longest-term pact offered a Vancouver player.

"I don't agree with five-year contracts," said Maloney, "but he's got it . . ."

Boddy, a defenceman by trade who clicked as a right winger on a line with Gerry O'Flaherty and Dave Dunn, also signed a "multi-year" pact. Maloney wouldn't say, but Boddy's guaranteed term of continued service is believed for three years.

The other signees are Brady, who shared goaltending duties last year with Bruce Bullock while playing for Seattle Totems in the Western League, and amateur draft choices Snepts, a defenceman from Edmonton Oil Kings, and Spruce, a left winger from London Knights of the Ontario Junior League.

Snepts, six-foot-three, was Vancouver's third draft choice.

Maloney also said holdover forwards Brian McSheffrey, John Gould and Gerry O'Flaherty and left winger Ron Sedlbauer, the team's No. 1 draft pick from Kitchener Rangers, also have agreed to terms. Only the formality of turning in their signed contracts remains.

Gould actually had been under contract but re-negotiated the one year remaining for a "multi-year" agreement.

"That brings back everyone that I wanted back," said Maloney, who interred the loss of goalkeeper Ed Dyck and winger Don Tannahill to the World Hockey Association hasn't upset him.

Maloney also was pleased to report that former Seattle trainer Pat Dunn has been hired in a similar capacity with the Canucks.

"Dunn's signing won't mean much to you," he told the assembled gathering of Victoria and Vancouver media, "but it's a big thing for me. He's in charge in the dressing room and having Dunn is certainly a big plus factor for me."

Canucks will open training in Victoria, for the first time since admittance into the NHL, with a week-long rookie camp at Juan de Fuca Arena starting Sept. 11.

Canucks' regular camp will start Sept. 16 at Memorial Arena.

New Trap Shooting Champ Sets Sights on Olympics

By STEWART LANG
Times Staff

"I'd give anything to go to them."

Gordon Osborne of Victoria, who won the singles and all-round titles at the Canadian trap shooting championships which ended at the Vancouver Gun Club last weekend, now has his sights on a different type of target — a spot on the national team for th 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal.

After the fall, Osborne plans to concentrate on the international style of shooting, which differs a lot from the regular North American brand of competition.

Clay birds used in international competition are made of a harder material and hence more difficult to break.

In addition, they fly faster — about 80 miles per hour — and at wider angles and heights than those used in Canada or the United States.

On the more positive side, a competitor has two shots (rather than one) at each bird.

But the 37-year-old Esquimalt plumbing contractor is no stranger to this form of shooting.

Two years after starting to shoot in 1960, he was on the Canadian team at the World championships in Cairo and made the trip to Brazil for the Pan-American Games the following year.

Then, he left the competitive scene until 1972, when he was on the five-man provincial squad which nailed down the singles team title.

Trials to select the Canadian Olympic team likely will be held prior to next year's Canadian championships in Montreal.

But international practice might be a little difficult.

Only two of these special layouts now exist in Canada — in Hamilton and Edmonton — and two more are being built in Vancouver and Montreal.

A member of both the South Vancouver Island Rangers and Victoria Gun Club, Osborne doesn't find the sport exceedingly expensive.

"Normally I win enough money to pay expenses. If you can do that, and enjoy it too, it's great," he chuckled.

Reloading his own shells also helps keep the costs down.

Osborne won the singles title by breaking 199 out of 200 birds and the all-round crown with 386x400, based on the last 400 in the 900 bird event. He finished with 832x900 over-all.

His over-all score was dragged down by a rather poor (to him) 85x100 in the Friday morning singles.

With a not-so-extraordinary 90x-100 that day, Osborne would have also taken the high over-all title.

It was his third and most successful trip to the nationals:

"I shot well but not good enough," Osborne said of his effort last year in Hamilton. "I was an also-ran."

Hopefully, that won't be the case in '76.

Busy Brenda Seeking Three Closed Crowns

RICHMOND — Busy Brenda Cameron zeroed in on three titles Friday at the B.C. closed junior tennis championships to highlight another strong showing by Victoria girls.

The 16-year-old from the Victoria Racquet Club, Nina Bland and Wendy and Lori Barlow all remained in title contention at the Western Indoor Tennis Club.

Miss Cameron led the way, however. She stormed into two under-18 finals and the 16-and-under girls' singles semi-finals. Brenda and Miss Bland will face the Barlow sisters in an all-Victoria playoff for the under-18 doubles title.

Wendy Barlow boosted her hopes of a second title by defeating Hollyburn's Rosemary Loehrich 6-2, 6-0 to move into the under-14 semi-finals.

Dave Picks Number As Ed Enjoys 'Four'

MILWAUKEE (AP) — "It's a good feeling to be leading by four strokes," Ed Sneed said Friday after three rounds of the $130,000 Milwaukee open golf tournament.

But Sneed, enjoying one of the largest 54-hole leads of the season on the pro tour, was not without a challenger going into today's last 18 holes.

"I have a number in mind," said Dave Hill, referring to his target score for the last round. "The number is 65."

Sneed, who has led ever since Wednesday's opening round, clipped one more shot off par with a 71 Friday and put together a 54-hole total of 204—14 under par on the 7,010-yard course.

Hill, with a 68, was tied for second at 208 with Bob Zender, who had a 69.

Next, at 211, were Tommy Aaron, Lee Trevino, Hubert Green, Larry Hinson, Bob Smith and Cesar Sanudo.

Aaron, alone in second after two rounds, blew to a 75. Green and Hinson had third-round 69s, Smith 70, Trevino 71 and Sanudo 73.

13-Year-Old Golfer Chasing Junior Title

A total of 25 golfers from Vancouver Island are among the 136-man field that will tee off Monday in the B.C. junior championship at Chilliwack.

Island entries include Victoria champion Jim Rutledge, Lee Haskell of Uplands, Jeff Wylie of Nanaimo and the top nine finishers behind Rutledge in the city tournament.

Wylie, only 13, is the youngest player in the field.

Haskell, former Victorian Rich Donaldson of Capilano and Al Swope of Pitt Meadows are entered and will be bidding for their second straight appearances on the B.C. interprovincial squad. The fourth member of last year's team and winner of the provincial title, Jim Nelford, has graduated from junior ranks.

All 136 starters will play the first two rounds but the field will be cut to 100 and ties for the third round and then to 50 and ties for the final round.

The top 20 scorers will then be invited to the B.C. Invitation tournament July 20-21. Scores from those two rounds as well as the four B.C. tournament rounds will be considered for selection to the team.

It's From Alston to Zahn As Dodgers Stretch Lead

By The Associated Press

Los Angeles Dodgers are having things their own way from A to Z—from Walter Alston, dean of major league managers, to rookie pitcher Geoff Zahn.

Alston gave Zahn, 27, his first start of the season in the second game of a double-header in Montreal Friday night and the lefthander pitched seven innings, allowing only one hit before Mike Marshall came on to preserve the Dodgers' 7-0 triumph. The Expos took the opener 11-6.

Elsewhere in the National League, St. Louis Cardinals edged Cincinnati Reds 3-2, Philadelphia Phillies flattened San Diego Padres 8-2, Houston Astros whipped Pittsburgh Pirates 7-1, Chicago Cubs took a pair from Atlanta Braves 4-1 and 3-2, and New York Mets nipped San Francisco Giants 3-2.

In the opener, the Dodgers failed to get by with Al Downing, who allowed six hits and six runs in 3 1-3 innings. Barry Foote later homered off Charlie Hough and Mike Jorgensen and Ken Singleton connected off Jim Brewer.

In the nightcap, ex-Dodger Willie Davis nicked Zahn for a single in the first inning and that was it for the Expos until Marshall made his 55th appearance of the season and allowed three more hits over the final two innings.

"I was a bit tired," admitted Zahn, who had pitched only 7 1-3 innings all season. "It was kind of my decision and the skip's to take me out."

Willie Crawford backed Zahn's pitching with a pair of two-run homers as the Dodgers stretched their lead in the NL West to 10 games over Cincinnati.

Pinch-hitter Jim Dwyer's tiebreaking two-run single in the eighth inning sparked St. Louis over the Reds.

Del Unser tripled in two runs and Bob Boone hit a three-run homer in Philadelphia's five-run first inning. That was more than enough for Steve Carlton, who snapped a three-game losing streak with a six-hitter over San Diego.

Milt May drove in three runs for Houston with three hits and Larry Dierker fired a four-hitter.

Over in the American League, the New York Yankees were driving the Texas Rangers batty.

The Yankees got 20 hits off assorted Texas pitching for a 14-2 romp over the Rangers.

Elliott Maddox and Thurman Munson got four hits each off David Clyde and three other Texas pitchers.

In other games, Detroit Tigers took a doubleheader from Chicago White Sox 9-6 and 7-4, Milwaukee Brewers beat Minnesota Twins 5-3 in the first game of a doubleheader before losing the second 6-4, Oakland A's tripped Baltimore Orioles 6-0, and California Angels lost to Cleveland Indians 7-2. Kansas City Royals and Boston Red Sox were rained out.

THANK YOU
FOR YOUR SUPPORT IN VICTORIA ON JUNE 20th AND 21st

The miners and organizers of the "March to Victoria" want to take this opportunity to thank all the miners, prospectors and other people who went to Victoria to register their protest against Bill 31.

The march is over, Bill 31 has been passed and the government has made it clear that they will not listen, no matter who gets hurt by this legislation.

What did this march accomplish? We think it accomplished PLENTY.

It showed that the government of British Columbia will not listen to the "little people," resulting in loss of jobs for development miners, diamond drillers, shaft-miners, drift-miners, exploration crews, prospectors and others. These men are the back-bone of the mining industry.

It showed that all kinds of people in B.C. who went to Victoria together, to support a common belief, are in favour of a new Unity Party in our province. They proved this with their cheers and applause for the courageous men who stood up on the steps of the Legislature and declared themselves in favour of unity and willing to put their province ahead of their party.

We appreciate the help, support and contributions of all the fine people who participated in making our march a success.

PIERRE-ELLIOT TRUDEAU A RADICAL SOCIALIST? . . . PREPOSTEROUS!!

Not at all preposterous, many Liberals realize that Mr. Trudeau has been quite at home with the NDP, but some will be surprised to learn that he is now and has for years been a dedicated socialist. He deserves credit for candor at least, since he has never attempted to hide his socialist beliefs. When questioned on the point during an appearance on the CBC program "THE WAY IT IS" staged at Queen's University on November 10, 1968, he minced no words in establishing the colour of his political philosophy:

INTERVIEWER: "MR. TRUDEAU, DURING YOUR YEARS SINCE YOU WERE A UNIVERSITY STUDENT, YOU'VE TRAVELLED MOST OF THE DISTANCE ON THE POLITICAL SPECTRUM, EVERYTHING LEFT OF CENTRE. I WAS WONDERING IF YOU COULD EXPLAIN TO US WHY YOU HAVE CHANGED YOUR POLITICAL PHILOSOPHY FROM THE TIMES YOU WERE EDITOR OF CITE LIBRE AND A SEVERE CRITIC OF THE LIBERAL PARTY TO YOUR PRESENT PHILOSOPHY WHICH ALLOWS YOU TO BE LEADER OF THE LIBERAL PARTY OF CANADA AND PRIME MINISTER?"

MR. TRUDEAU: "THERE'S A MISTAKE HERE. JUST BECAUSE THE LIBERAL PARTY HAS CHANGED ITS PHILOSOPHY YOU SHOULDN'T ASSUME THAT I'VE CHANGED MINE! . . . NO PARTY, NO MATTER HOW VENERABLE AND OLD AND STRUCTURED AND BOSSED BY MACHINES AND IMBUED IN HISTORY, AND CONTROLLED BY STRONG MEN, NO PARTY CAN REALLY ESCAPE THE CONTROL OF A GROUP OF PEOPLE WHO WANT TO GET IN THERE AND DECIDE TO CONTROL IT THEMSELVES. WHICH WE DID!"

On January 13, 1969, while visiting in the United Kingdom, he met with Canadian students studying there, one of whom asked Mr. Trudeau:

QUESTIONER: "WHAT SOCIETY WOULD YOU CHOOSE TO MAKE CANADA? SOCIALIST OR CAPITALIST?"

MR. TRUDEAU: "LABOUR PARTY SOCIALIST — OR CUBAN SOCIALISM OR CHINESE SOCIALISM — SOCIALISM FROM EACH ACCORDING TO HIS MEANS."

Have the majority of long time supporters of the Liberal Party really changed their philosophy so radically? Or are they simply refusing to face the fact that Mr. Trudeau has taken over the Party and imposed on it his philosophy?

It is now apparent that Mr. Trudeau's petulance over David Lewis' refusal to support the minority government stemmed not from a difference of essentials in viewpoint but from chagrin at Lewis' hasty methods. Both want the same thing: radical socialism. Lewis wants to bull ahead while Mr. Trudeau, the wiser tactician, chooses to move more gradually so as not to arouse opposition. After all, Mr. Trudeau and Lewis both contributed to the socialist handbook "SOCIAL PURPOSE FOR CANADA" in which Mr. Trudeau's contribution appears at pages 371 to 393 under the title "The Practice and Theory of Federalism". One quote from that text is most illuminating: at page 373 Mr. Trudeau says, "FEDERALISM MUST BE WELCOMED AS A VALUABLE TOOL WHICH PERMITS DYNAMIC PARTIES TO PLANT SOCIALIST GOVERNMENTS IN CERTAIN PROVINCES, FROM WHICH THE SEEDS OF RADICALISM CAN SLOWLY SPREAD." Mr. Trudeau is still working on his insidious plan — Lewis thinks he has achieved it. Thank God for Lewis; if we are lucky he has probably defeated his own (and Mr. Trudeau's) scheme, at least on the federal level. Here in B.C. we have seen how dynamic and radical such a provincial government can be! Unfortunately, Barrett's seed of radicalism is not spreading as slowly as Mr. Trudeau anticipated.

Speaking of radicals — why is Mr. Trudeau loath to even attempt bringing the FLQ kidnappers home to answer for their crimes? Too much bother? Or is there another reason? Remember that in 1964 Mr. Trudeau and Gerard Pelletier turned the leftist publication, CITE LIBRE, over to former FLQ revolutionary leader, Pierre Vallieres, who for six months wrote revolutionary separatist editorials in it.

To have someone like Trudeau at the head of the Liberal party is, to use his Own phrase, a joke. The day he announced that he was running for Liberal leadership, Mr. Trudeau told the press, "If I try to assess what happened in the past two months, I have a suspicion you people (the press) had a lot to do with it . . . think it started out like a practical joke on the Liberal Party. I mean that, because in some sense, the decison that I made this morning and last night is in some ways similar to that I arrived at when I entered the Liberal Party." (Walter Stewart, SHRUG, p. 205). We are no longer laughing!

Mr. Trudeau epitomizes the "practical" socialist prepared to use any means (including the Liberal Party) to achieve his ends. Realizing that he did not have a power base in Quebec to get elected by running for the NDP, he and fellow socialists, Jean Marchand and Gerard Pelletier, became "Liberals" in 1965 and were elected to Parliament where they formed the "New Guard" of the Liberal Party.

How many "Liberals" do you know with a history like Mr. Trudeau's:

1940: Booted out of the Canadian Officer Training Corps (COTC) during the war for lack of discipline. (Robert McKenzie, in Toronto Star March 3, 1968)

1941: Associated with anti-war and Red-supported Bloc Populaire in undermining the war effort.

1947: While at the London School of Economics, told Norman DePoe that Professor Harold Laski, the Fabian-Marxist, was "the most stimulating and powerful influence he had encountered." (Weekend Magazine No. 13, 1966)

1950: Was in Shanghai when the Communists took over, and became a rabid admirer of Mao Tse-tung and his Red regime.

1951: Back in Montreal, he launched the leftist publication CITE LIBRE and had the collaboration of Gerard Pelletier in this venture. Among well-known Reds who collaborated, we note: Professor Raymond Boyer (convicted of Soviet espionage in the Gouzenko Case); Stanley B. Ryerson, leading theoretician of the Communist Party and editor of Marxist Review; Pierre Gelinas, Quebec director of Agitation and Propaganda of the Communist Party.

1952: Led a delegation of Communists to the Moscow Economic Conference.

1953: Barred entry into the United States as an "inadmissible" person — presumably for his leftist activities.

1955: Launched Le Ressemblement, a leftist "united front" rally in Quebec.

1960: Led a delegation to Peking for Red victory celebrations and helped pen the book "Two Innocents In Red China".

1961: "Social Purpose for Canada", the socialist handbook was published containing chapters by Mr. Trudeau and David Lewis. Also chapters by well known socialists: Professor Frank R. Scott, Professor George Grube, Dr. Eugene Forsey, Professor J. C. Weldon, Professor Stuart Jamieson and T. Shoyama.

1962: Appointed to the Red-line Canadian Peace Research Institute.

1963: Campaigned with the NDP against the Liberals, whom he called "idiots".

1971: While visiting the Soviet Union supplied the Soviets with anti-western propaganda as reported by Lubor Zink in the Toronto Telegram of June 2nd, 1971;

". . . Mr. Trudeau rewarded his beguiling hosts not only with signing the friendship protocol they suggested, but with two gratuitous statements which are priceless to the Kremlin.

"One was his assertion in Kiev that Soviet and Canadian citizens were living under similar Federal systems of government; the other was his repeated allegation of acute U.S. 'danger to our identity from the cultural, economic and perhaps even military point of view'.

"The Kiev utterance is the cruelest blow any Western politican could have inflicted on the countless millions of ruthlessly regimented people — not only in the Ukraine but throughout the Soviet totalitarian empire — who look to the western democracies for at least moral support of their aspirations of a bit more human life. Along comes the Prime Minister of Canada, their dreamland of freedom, and tells them that the political system in his country is not really much different from the Bolshevik dictatorship. No head of government of any other free country (including Finland which lives in fear of and under constant pressure from Moscow) has ever come anywhere near rendering such a macabre service to the Kremlin.

"And on top of that Mr. Trudeau tells the world from Soviet soil that Canada is in such a danger of being smothered by the U.S. that he finds it necessary to seek Moscow's support for the preservation of Canadian identity and independence. No wonder the butchers of Hungary and Czechoslovakia were falling over themselves in honouring Trudeau . . ."

Can true Liberals continue to support Mr. Trudeau? We may not like the alternative, but do we have any other? Certainly not Lewis — anyway, B.C. is already getting more than its fair share of totalitarian socialism under Barrett.

On July 8th make sure you know where YOUR candidate stands on the vital questions. He is applying for the job to REPRESENT you and he must be made to understand that he is YOUR PAID SERVANT — he should REPRESENT you not DICTATE to you. It is in your hands as an elector and remember; we sometimes get the governments we deserve!

X-Ray 'Prints' Trace Trade

VANCOUVER (CP) — The combination of physics and archeology is being used to help trace human history and sometimes the results are revolutionary.

A physics professor at Simon Fraser University is using x-rays to trace the trade routes of Indians living in British Columbia 5,000 years ago.

Erle Nelson uses x-ray fluorescence analysis to trace the few Pacific Northwest varieties of obsidian, a cutting tool which Indians traded everywhere.

R. R. Haering, University of British Columbia physics head, said that with proven application of Mr. Nelson's techniques, "we may be able to determine the evolution of trade patterns."

"In time, we may even be able to tell whether or not man did come to North America from Siberia."

Mr. Nelson has used x-ray bombardment to produce atomic "fingerprints" of obsidian samples from Mount Edziza, near Telegraph Creek and Anahim Peak, near Obsidian Creek—the only B.C. sources of obsidian—as well as the few locations in Oregon where the volcanic material may be found.

He then checks the fingerprints of obsidian artifacts found elsewhere to determine where the obsidian came from.

The detective work already has produced patterns of obsidian trade which show the route Alexander MacKenzie used to reach the Pacific in 1793 was one of the main Indian trading routes for many years.

Older artifacts dating back 5,000 years have confirmed trade routes, Mr. Haering said.

He said that Mr. Nelson's technique eventually may be applied to other sciences, to history and perhaps to criminology because many objects have definite x-ray fingerprints.

"It looks extremely promising," Mr. Haering said. "I believe the next real expansion in science will come on the inner frontiers where sciences overlap, rather than the outer frontiers where individual sciences push outwards in their own directions."

'Progressive' Georgia City Strife-Torn

By PAUL WHITELAW
Special to the Times

ATLANTA — When Maynard Jackson was elected the first black mayor of this city last fall by a coalition of black and white voters, it reinforced a widely-held impression that Atlanta is the most progressive city of the so-called "new" American south.

Indeed, in many ways, Atlanta has been a model for other big U.S. cities — not only because of its impressive record of relatively-tranquil race relations, but in enlightened urban development and economic growth.

But the black mayor and the white police chief are now at each other's throats. The bitter dispute, in which the attempted firing of the chief by Jackson has been blocked by the courts, has caused a dramatic increase in racial tension that threatens to polarize the white and black communities. It flared into a riot last week — with blacks charging there was a brutal over-reaction by police. the incident was certainly more reminiscent of Selma or Birmingham a decade ago than Atlanta.

"I think clearly there are anxieties that came out of my election last year," admitted Mayor Jackson as he talked to a small group of out-of-town reporters in his city hall office this week.

The reporters had come to ing of Mrs. Martin Luther Atlanta because of the shoot-King Sr., and the mayor noted that he thought her murder "will have a compounding effect on race relations in this city."

Jackson expressed concern that many Atlantans — black and white — see his dispute with police chief John Inman, a hard-line law and order advocate, in racial terms. But the mayor maintains he wants to fire the chief because he is incompetent and has resisted attempts to make the police department more accountable to his administration and city council. The man he would like to appoint as a replacement is white.

The bad blood between the two men goes back to Jackson's term as vice-mayor. He has been a consistent critic of Inman since the chief was appointed two years ago by Mayor Sam Massell, who ran an openly rascist campaign for re-election last October. Jackson obtained more than 90 per cent of the black votes and 24 per cent of the ballots cast by white voters.

In the latest development in the dispute, the Georgia Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that Inman's case will be tried by city council — somewhat like an impeachment proceeding — which will require a two-thirds majority vote to remove him from office. While it is believed that the council will go along with the mayor, the proceedings are likely to create more bitterness.

Mayor Jackson maintains that, despite his fight with the chief, there remains a climate of tolerance in this city far superior to other U.S. urban centres; that the attention paid to the riot is merely the price of success.

"There was a mini-riot in Philadelphia the other day," he said, leaning forward across a large desk to stress his point. "That wasn't reported by too many newspapers."

The violent outburst in Atlanta occurred during a march to protest the shooting of a 17-year-old black parole violator by police. Because no permit had been issued for the march, police attempted to block the demonstrators at a downtown intersection. When the marchers refused to disperse, police moved in with billy clubs and horses. Ironically, almost all the policemen were black. Returning hurriedly from a conference of mayors in California, Mayor Jackson issued permits for further marches that were called for by the demonstration leaders, in an effort to prevent further violence. But the protest leaders decided on a temporary moratorium on further demonstrations when Mrs. King was killed.

"I've signed an executive order recognizing them as commemorative marches," said Jackson, adding that his decision will have to be ratified at the next meeting of city council.

The mayor noted that because of his dispute with Chief Inman, he is "under a court order to rejoin from interfering with the police department."

"My inability to assure the safety of the community led me to oppose the march."

"The shooting of the young parole violator occurred in an atmosphere that is volatile because the city government is enjoined from control of the police department," continued the mayor. "We have an independent paramilitary organization in this city."

If last week's riot — which was front-page news in many American newspapers — pointed up the fight between Jackson and Chief Inman, it also focussed attention on the somewhat bitter differences among leaders of the black community. In a way, these divisions are the inevitable result of the tremendous advances by blacks in recent years — and the widening gulf between the growing black middle class and the poor.

Jackson, the 35-year-old son of a Baptist preacher, who cut his political teeth in the civil protest of the early 1960s, noted that he naturally "recognizes the right to address grievances peacefully."

But with a black in control of city hall, and an increasing number of blacks in positions of authority in both the city and state governments, the mayor believes the surest way to address grievances is through the courts and the manipulation of government machinery.

In this regard, he is supported by many of the most prominent civil rights leaders of a decade ago, including the Rev. Martin Luther King Sr.

Before the violent demonstration last week, telephone calls from both the mayor and Dr. King convinced the mother of the slain black youth not to permit a coffin with his body to be carried in the march. They had hoped that the mother's decision would cause a cancellation of the march.

But the protest leader, Rev. Hoseah Williams, who has been charged with inciting the riot, angrily told his followers: "... I'm not listening to these chicken-eating, money-loving, Cadillac-driving, bull-shitting preachers. They (police) are murdering our children and we've got to march."

DYING DISEASE but still a killer is smallpox which has claimed more than 30,000 lives in the Indian state of Bihar this year. According to the world Health Organization, the disease should be eradicated by the end of next year — other authorities put down the end of the decade before it is completely gone from the face of the earth. But these statistics are small consolation to suffering children such as the one above.

Grizzlies Find Pies Tastier in Dozens

CHANDALAR CAMP, Alaska (AP) — If they held a pie-eating contest at this remote Trans-Alaska Pipeline camp 100 miles north of the Arctic Circle, there's no doubt who would win — the grizzlies.

One hungry bear recently marched into the camp kitchen within full view of the cooks and gobbled 11 freshly-baked pies without so much as a burp.

Camp manager Pat Tizo admits he has a grudging admiration for the critters.

"I sure would like to hire them," he said. "They can really move dirt when they're digging out a squirrel."

Tizo, a weatherbeaten Irish-Italian veteran of pipeline construction projects throughout the world, says one bear took to sleeping under the kitchen.

"One day a plumber crawled under the kitchen to fix the pipes," he said.

"He heard something moving around and asked who it was. When he saw it was a bear, he beat it the hell out of there."

Actually, the grizzlies are a serious problem here and at other pipeline camps. Nonetheless, state fish and game officials have made it clear they won't tolerate harassment of the bears.

"Grizzlies were here first, and they will be here after we leave," Tizo said. "And we're not going to bother them any more than we have to."

Camp supervisors have firearms, but no bears have been shot — yet. And fish and game officials have given helicopter pilots permission to buzz potentially dangerous animals away from the workers.

Not long ago a survey crew stumbled on a grizzly which stopped feeding on a moose carcass just long enough to tree the surveyors. The bear wouldn't leave until a helicopter chased him off.

"I don't think they're afraid of the choppers," said pilot Bob Louck. "They just don't like the noise."

Spencer Linderman, a fish and game biologist, says the pilots sometimes go too far. He said one pilot kept chasing a black bear up a mountain. The bear wouldn't stay put because black bears don't like an alpine habitat, Linderman explained.

And he says much of the problem results from the workers and the bears being too inquisitive about each other.

One man tried to feed a bear while he was trying to shoot it with a tranquilizer gun to remove it from the camp, he added.

Linderman also says the problem would be reduced if cameras were barred from the camp.

"One time a guy was so busy taking a picture he didn't notice the bear coming and he had to run pretty fast," Tizo said.

So far no injuries have been reported, but some surveyors have balked at going back to work if bears are reported in the area.

A pipeline worker said one camp even set up a bear patrol.

However, an Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. spokesman denied that and said helicopter pilots merely check out areas before surveyors go to work.

Officials say the main difficulty may be that most workers simply are not familiar with bears.

100,000 Die on the Job Because of Safety Lack

STOCKHOLM (AP) — An estimated 100,000 workers around the world die on the job every year due to a lack of safety precautions, the director-general of the Geneva-based International Labor Organization (ILO) said Friday.

ILO Director Francis Blanchard said this at the opening of an international metal workers congress.

He cited as an example health risks at chemical works.

"The American National Academy of Science has estimated that there are about half a million chemical products in use in the United States," Blanchard said.

"Also we should not forget the effects of radioactive substances, noise and vibration hazards. These are problems that must be attacked on a broad front."

Another speaker, Ber Lundin, chairman of the Swedish Metal Workers Union with over 400,000 members, charged multi-national corporations with "exporting poor working conditions."

He said that Swedish and other concerns which operate internationally take advantage of gaps in the laws of various countries to export job hazards.

International co-operation among labor groups is needed to protect workers, he said.

"We also need legislation putting more responsibility on those who introduce new products. But that is not enough, the labor movement must get influence on the products research and development."

Harnessed H-Bomb Closer

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (UPI) — A $10 million apparatus called syllac at the Los Alamos scientific laboratory may hold a key to the development of a practical reactor drawing on the energy of nuclear fusion.

The potential of fusion is so great for electrical power generation that U.S. Atomic Energy Commission chairman Dixy Lee Ray says it "can only be compared in importance with fire as it was first discovered by man."

But even though the Los Alamos lab (LASL) and other research institutions around the world are trying to develop a feasible fusion reactor, scientists feel it may be after the year 2000 before fusion can be in anything more than an experimental status.

Nuclear reactors now operate on the fission process, by which the nuclei of heavy atoms such as uranium or plutonium are split. In a fusion reaction, the nuclei of light atoms such as hydrogen, deuterium and lithium are fused, or joined, to release energy.

Fusion, the source of the sun's energy, has been applied on earth so far only in the uncontrolled reaction of a hydrogen bomb. LASL claims credit for the first controlled fusion reaction in 1958, but it lasted only a millionth of a second, hardly long enough to produce power.

The snag in development of a feasible fusion reactor is the intense heat of up to 10 million degrees centigrade generated in a thermonuclear reaction. At those temperatures, everything exists as superheated gas or plasma.

The main thrust of experiments under way at Los Alamos and other labs is to find a way to hold the plasma long enough to allow a reaction to take place to produce energy. It has been shown that plasma can be held in a magnetic field for short periods.

Early experiments placed the plasma in a magnetic field of linear configuration. But the plasma leaked out the ends of the field before it could be held long enough to produce an energy-yielding reaction.

This spring, LASL dedicated the new device called syllac, designed to hold the plasma in a circular magnetic field.

Los Alamos scientists say syllac has the potential of confining plasma for 200 microseconds, about 20 times longer than previous confinement devices have been able to hold the superheated gas.

If it does what they think it can do, scientists say syllac will be the key to unlock the door to development of a feasible fusion reactor. A syllac type of device would be the heart of such a reactor, which would be used to heat water for steam turbines for electrical generation. Scientists are also hoping to be able to produce electricity directly from the heat of a fusion reactor.

Dr. Ray says syllac is "one of the most promising" experiments in controlled thermonuclear research underway around the nation.

"The theoretical possibilities of this are enormous," she said at dedication ceremonies for syllac.

Douglas Plans Layoffs

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — A cutback in production will result in the layoff of more than 760 workers at the Douglas Aircraft Co. of Canada Ltd. plant this summer, a union official says.

Jack Kirkby, president of Local 1967, United Auto Workers, said Thursday 390 production workers will be laid off for an indefinite period July 19 and another 370 Aug. 23. He said a decline in orders for the DC-10 aircraft is responsible.

Most of the workers are members of Local 1967. However, office workers of Local 673 and some staff workers will be affected.

Kirkby said most of the layoffs are based on seniority.

"Most of the workers laid off have been here since only 1969. However, in the odd case, some people who have been here since 1967 have been affected."

Average hourly rate for plant workers is $5.20 and for Local 673 it is $5.57.

Workers with one year of service will receive 67 per cent of their pay plus three weeks cost-of-living bonus until unemployment insurance eligibility.

Kirkby said the company announcement attributed the layoffs to a slump in the aerospace industry.

Bolshoi in Decline

Current appearances of the Bolshoi Ballet are providing the sobering spectacle of the disintegration of a great and shining tradition.

There are three Bolshoi companies performing at the present moment. One is at home in Moscow, one is in London as part of a six-week tour of Britain, and the third, as everyone now knows, is in Canada.

Overall the critics have been unanimous in nominating the Bolshoi as has-been of the year. The legend of Russian infallibility in ballet that was kindled in the time of Diaghileff, Nijinsky and Pavlova is in the process of being consumed by its own fires.

When one becomes so great a legend there must never for a moment be a dwindling of the magic flame or the grey ash will become visible and disillusionment once begun will be almost impossible to overcome.

Thus in Toronto, John Fraser in The Globe and Mail finds only 12 minutes of defecting star Mikhail Barichnikov a consolation for the other 90 minutes of performance by the rest of the company.

And in Vancouver The Sun's Max Wyman finds the performance (without Barichnikov) "an evening of dull and antiquated dance brightened only occasionally by shafts of flashy technical sparkle and the rare moment of real dance brilliance."

But if any Canadian commentator thinks that Canada has drawn a second-rate Bolshoi while the real McCoy is working its proper magic in London, listen to New York's Clive Barnes on the subject:

"The ensemble seems a little elderly," he comments, "and some of the dancers unduly depressed." Barnes has high words of praise for the season's hit, Spartacus, but finishes by saying sadly . . . "there were other aspects of these Bolshoi performances that seemed less than the old Bolshoi that we have grown to know and love in the West.

"It needed — and I never expected to say this of the Bolshoi of all companies — more vitality."

The Russian show-biz mystique is still working its charm at the box office. At London's $21.50 tops and Vancouver's $12.50, there have been sell-out audiences providing standing ovations.

As with everyone else, lured by the mystique, I watched the Bolshoi performing in the Queen Elizabeth, and made my own value judgment.

Not being in any sense a ballet pundit with the pundit's lexicon at my finger-tip and penetrating eye for technical niceties, I relied on the critic's ally — comparison.

Comparison's best help is with interpretive evaluation but after all what is art if not an interpretation. Certainly it is not technique.

Vivid memories of the enchantment and emotional qualities of Margot Fonteyn's Odette in the Royal Ballet Company's Swan Lake were brought face to face with the fragilely tragic Odette of Lioubov Gershunova.

Gershunova is a spirit-bird caught in a net of sorcery, fluent and transparent as a feather against the sun. But she was all there was. There was nothing to catch at the breath in the routine corps-de ballet. The richness and drama of the Royal Ballet performance were quite absent.

The technical bravura and purity in the work of several of the soloists was superb but the program seemed incohesive and almost mechanical.

Snatches from the company's repertoire, such as the Divertisements and single acts from longer works leave one with an unfulfilled feeling. Character development is important in ballet and there could be no more character development in an isolated act of a ballet than in a synopsis of a full novel.

What, if anything, political pressures have to do with the artistic depression of the company one cannot really be sure. Pressures there inevitably are and some follow them on tour.

Overt but well-mannered efforts were made at the QE performances by pickets weaving through the crowd and issuing leaflets drawing attention to the plight of the Jews in Russia.

In London demonstrations were uglier. Eggs and nails were thrown on the stage and white mice let loose among the audience.

Such actions and the defection of an important company member are certainly not going to be without effect on the temperament and therefore the morale of the company.

But those are external irritations. What we saw in Vancouver would lead most of us to the conclusion that the spirit of the Bolshoi which, even when evident, has a forced quality, is being eroded at source.

IN HARMONY with their surroundings the Pacific Wind Quintet relaxes in rehearsal break. The ensemble is the core of Summer Music '74, a five-week series of Tuesday-Thursday chamber ensemble concerts at UVic's MacLaurin Auditorium. With them next week will be pianist Robin Wood. Left to right, seated, are Richard Ely, Eileen Gibson, Lanny Pollet and Tim Paradise. Standing is Jesse Read.

Dancer Defected For His Art

TORONTO (UPI) — Soviet ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov, who bolted from the ranks of the touring Bolshoi ballet troupe in Toronto a week ago, says his decision to defect to the West was "not a political act . . . but an artistic one."

The Toronto Globe and Mail today published an interview with Baryshnikov, the famed dancer's first public statement since his defection.

Last Monday, the government granted Baryshnikov a six-month permit to work in the country.

"This is not a political act I have done but an artistic one," he said. "I sincerely hope it causes no strain in the relationship between Canada and Russia. I am certainly grateful to this country and I hope I will be able to show this thankfulness with my heart."

"I made the decision to defect by myself without any pressure from and friend," Baryshnikov told John Fraser, the Globe and Mail's dance critic in the interview which was conducted at the suburban hideaway where he is staying.

Acommpanying him in hiding is Christina Berlin, 26, an American who met Baryshnikov in 1970 when he made his Western debut in London.

"At the last moment, when things got very difficult for me, I decided to call my close friend, Christina, and ask her to come and be by my side . . . I can tell you there are few such friends in the world as Christina, but I ask everyone, please, not to make this into a bedroom drama."

Although he can now manage a few phrases in English, Baryshnikov spoke mainly through an interpreter, Dina Makarova, a free-lance dance photographer who has known Baryshnikov since 1969.

HE GOT DRUNK . . . PROFESSIONALLY

NEW YORK (AP) — A disc jockey got drunk on the air here for the second Independence Day weekend in a row to discourage motorists from drinking while driving.

"I'm not a drinker at all," said WNEW jockey Ted Brown of New York during his program. I've only been drunk a few times.

"Last year, the first time I did this, was easier. I didn't know what would happen. This year I know I'm going to be very sick. But if I can keep one person from driving after drinking it will be worth it."

Brown then tackled a fifth of scotch, under the watchful eye of a nurse and two state police sergeants who took part in the program.

The officers tested Brown's blood several times for alcohol content.

During the four-hour program, Brown became progressively befuddled.

Once he put his earphones on backwards. Later, he forgot the name of his station, as well as his home telephone number.

CHINA'S POSTER MAN UNMASKED, BLASTED

PEKING (Reuter) — New wall posters in Peking today unmasked and denounced Golden Monkey, the anonymous author of some of the most hard-hitting allegations in Peking's wall poster campaign.

The posters condemning the Golden Monkey — the pseudonym is taken from the Chinese monkey legend and symbolizes the spirit of rebellion — was written by "mass representatives" from the Golden Monkey's own workplace, the Peking No. 2 general machinery plant.

"Is he a human being or is he a devil?" the posters asked, adding that his name was in fact Chen Chia-hou.

The posters demanded that Chen be labelled a "reactionary element."

The Golden Monkey's wall posters, pasted up alongside scores of others along Peking's Eternal Revolution Street, said among other things that agents of the United States, Chiang Kai-shek and the Soviet Union have infiltrated the Chinese Communist party.

Tenor's Base Act

CHICAGO (UPI) — A tenor with the lyric opera of Chicago was arrested and charged early today with hiring another man to kill a fellow singer because of "professional jealousy."

Police said Bibro and Loftus had been singing supporting roles and in the chorus of the opera company for several years, and that Bibro allegedly acted out of "professional jealousy."

Rehabilitating a Rake

BY LON WOOD
Times Staff

When you meet the right-hand man of B.C.'s minister of trade and commerce you expect a lot of guff on the GNP, the GPP and perhaps even the NDP.

Even though it's off-hours, you don't expect to get into serious discussion about art, cultural development in Canada, films or legitimate theatre — but with Eric Green you often will.

Green is executive assistant to Gary Lauk, Premier Barrett's youngest cabinet colleague. Lauk plucked him from his job at B.C. Television to take on the role of what Sun columnist Al Fotheringham described at the time as "ego polisher." But that's another story.

Green has just signed a contract with the CBC to adapt his full-length stage play entitled The Assassination of Christopher Marlowe into two one-hour segments for radio.

In an interview this week at his Deep Cove home, the question was put, "What the hell is the right-hand of a left-wing government's right-wing ministry doing writing drama?"

His answer is unabashed:

"Simply, I've been a free-lance writer since high school, righ through university."

In 1971 Green went to England on a Canada Council doctoral fellowship.

"My general study of Elizabethan drama narrowed down to Christopher Marlowe — I read everything that was ever writen about him.

"I became fascinated and strongly attached to the theory that he was assassinated — not killed in a drunken tavern brawl.

A number of books written since 1924, when Dr. Leslie Hoson discovered the corner's report on Marlowe's death, have disputed the assassination theory, said Green.

"But that report, when forensic experts examined it, suggested that Marlowe was assassinated."

Green explained further his interest in the paradox of a great poet-playwright — from whom Shakespeare took his basic dramatic structure — put down as a rake.

"High school English teachers are still infected with this puritanical myth — an attempt to discredit Marlowe because he appeared to be an atheist."

Green wrote the play because Marlowe's time was filled with religious, political and social conflict, and the poet was as dramatic as any of his characters.

"It seemed to me that he would make an excellent protagonist," he says.

Stratford Festival in Ontario expressed interest in the play and accepted it tentatively for production this year. But the cast turned out to be too large and costly for the company's Stage Three program — so it was shelved.

"I submitted the play to CBC radio and they agreed to produce it," said Green. "I suppose now I am committed to redeeming Marlowe's character — but as a playwright I see it simply as excellent material for drama."

The lead part was written specifically for a friend, Alan Scarfe, one of Stratford's leading actors. The theme — assassination — has special meaning today, says Green, "because we have seen political ethnic and religious leaders assassinated — even on television."

GREEN . . . sells play to CBC

Green studied philosophy and English at UBC and University College in England and worked in theatre as a sideline, through the Frederick Wood and Playhouse Theatre companies.

After high school in North Kamloops, Green worked as a reporter for daily newspapers in Kamloops and Prince Rupert. He continued freelance and creative writing at UBC, winning a CBC creative writing award and an IODE scholarship for creative writing.

After graduating first class with a Masters degree in philosophy and English, CBC paid him to write several short television dramas.

But why the department of industry, trade and commerce?

"The world of business is a dramatic world too — I can't help seeing things in that framework. Besides, the conditions of existence — including our cultural character — are rooted in economics, in commerce, or in money, just as much as they are in social or psychological circumstances."

Whether he qualifies or not at age 34, Green comes across as the epitome of the angry young (Canadian) man as he sounds off on all issues relating to our cultural stock:

- "The CBC has an abominable record in its treatment of the writer, and the National Film Board disregards them almost entirely."
- "It is unfortunate that we still suffer from an inferiority complex about our abilities. The two parent cultures, British and American, still dominate us."
- "Actors and directors have reaped the benefits of public support at the writer's expense. I am looking to a new organization — Writer's Equity — to lobby strongly for Canada's writers."

Green said he thinks the first serious comment about the Canadian cultural character is in Margaret Atwood's book Survival.

"We have been asking ourselves openly for 10 years, 'who are we?' Survival begins to hold the mirror up for us to look at ourselves."

Florida Rescue Handling Criticized

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — Edward Horne, who spent 13 hours in shark-infested waters with his wife and five children, has criticized the way the United States Coast Guard handled their rescue.

Horne's 43-foot cabin cruiser, Princess Dianne, sank in a storm Monday night off Carrabelle, Fla. Edward Jr., 3, and Billy, 10, died while en route by helicopter to Tyndall Air Force Base in Panama City, Fla.

Billy had an arm and a leg mangled by a shark. Edward Jr. apparently died of shock and exposure.

Horne said the coast guard should have had oxygen in the rescue helicopter, and accused the coast guard of not resuming the air search until three hours after daylight Tuesday.

Horne said he radioed the exact position of the cruiser about 10:30 p.m. and he saw a helicopter make two passes in the distance during the night but the air search was not resumed until three hours after daylight.

The coast guard said there were planes up all night and the disaster could have been averted if the pleasure craft carried a small dinghy or rubber life raft.

Amin Protests

PARIS (AP) — President Idi Amin of Uganda has lodged a formal protest with France over a film that suggests his government ordered the death of thousands of citizens, authoritative sources said.

The French-made documentary also shows the strongman president coaxing a crocodile to splash into the Nile, clapping in an effort to startle an elephant and delivering long monologues on his philosophy and policy.

SEARS . . . rough-hewn lyricism

He Tells It With Gusto

By PAT BARCLAY

Like an early robin or a precocious snowdrop, a first novel by Dennis T. Patrick Sears announced that spring was on the way, even the novel's dust jacket looks like spring: slender white letters, reading "The Lark in the Clear Air", float against a background of blue sky and misty cloud like fresh linen on a clothesline. It's all very clean, pure and fresh. A modern Keats, chafing in his winter underwear, could wax lyrical over the imminence of spring on the strength of that dust jacket alone.

But we can throw overboard whatever expectations the sight of that ethereal bookcover might have roused. The Lark in the Clear Air does have its lyric moments, and its author is a sentimental romantic with a poet's eye, but it is also a tale both ribald and brawling, told with a degree of gusto that is credible only in an Irishman.

Its author is introduced by his publisher in such melodramatic terms that at first I thought he was a hoax: "Born in Vancouver on February 5th, 1925, the son of a 'two-fisted saloon fighter,' Sears is no mean fighter himself — his left hand has been broken five times; the other, three times, his jaw is all kicked out of place. His nose has been broken and his face is well-scarred. ('I'm a scrapper,' he observes.) Sears saw his first killing when he was six years old . . ." And in his own words: ". . . I feel this book is not written through the half-blind, rose-colored remembrances dictated by a fond nostalgia. Life was earthy, bawdy, heady and vigorous. We were no strangers to death, violence, debauchery and lust." A final note adds that with his marriage, Sears reached a "turning point"; he describes his wife as a "benign influence," his "alter ego personified."

At 15, Danny is orphaned when his father catches his mother "in a situation too flagrant for even woman's capacity to lie out of," shoots her with his rifle and later kills himself, after a wild chase through the bush after her paramour. To escape the clutches of the Children's Aid, Danny leaves Alberta and goes to live with his great-uncle Mick in Brule Township, a mythical region some 100 miles north of Toronto where the station agent tells him, "There ain't nothing but wild steers, beaver hay and bog-men."

Here he spends two years cattle, privy and hell-raising, and falls in love twice. He endures bereavement and blackflies, and developes an enduring love-hate relationship with his great-uncle when they each take a shine to the pretty new school teacher.

But what happens in The Lark in the Clear Air is not all that important; what matters in this novel is the land and the people as Danny sees them, and the language which Sears uses to describe them.

Sears' style is rococo-rustic. It swarms with sharply observed detail couched in homely figures of speech and rough-hewn lyricism. (For example, "Her hair had been set upon by assorted dyes and chemicals until it was the hue of an iodined dog." Or, "The water-holes shrank to pots of scum in the centre of mud-wallows pocked and holed where the cattle labored to their hocks to get at the blood-warm ooze in the centre.")

The blend of coarse fact and wild poetry is especially appropriate when Sears is describing great-uncle Mick. Mick Mulcahy is strong and handsome and "pushing sixty from the wrong side," university trained and alcoholically inclined, and given to serenading the countryside with vulgar ditties while accompanying himself on the banjo. Like W. O. Mitchell, Sears is a deft creator of memorable eccentrics, and his portrait of Mulcahy is both bizarre and convincing.

A simple tale, then, but engagingly told and peopled with lusty characters. Even when nothing much is happening, Sears can hold our attention with ease: "One morning, when the larder had hit low tide and I couldn't find enough Tea-Bisk left to batch together a pan of flapjacks or find a single egg, we scotched along on a breakfast of unmilked tea and a couple of pieces of rat-toast scorched into indigestibility by pronging the bread on the end of the fly swatter and holding it over the pine fire until it had an even coating of soot and cinders on both sides."

I finished that chapter, which went on to describe a visit to the general store and a meeting with the local lecherous spinster, still hoping to find out what the hero had for lunch.

THE LARK IN THE CLEAR AIR, by Dennis T. Patrick Sears. McClelland and Stewart. $6.95.

The Scientist Who Wakes Up Too Late

By GEORGE WOODCOCK

That man may become the victim of his own machines is already an old fear. E. M. Forster developed it sixty years ago in The Machine Stops, where the breakdown of a great machine on which human existence has become dependent heralds the death of the race. Forster's machine remained a machine, though a highly sophisticated one, and man was doomed because he had become reliant on the mechanical and had abdicated his human qualities of enterprise and resourcefulness.

PARAMIND, by Jim Willer, McClelland and Stewart. $7.95.

The idea that machines may intervene positively in human life, defying the controlling hand of man, was introduced almost as long ago by Karel Capek in R.U.R., the play that in 1920 introduced the word "robot" into the English language. Since then the idea that man might overreach himself and become the victim of his own inventiveness has become almost a convention among futurist writers. It is a form rather than a theme, and, like the sonnet in generations past, the trick is not to alter the form, but to perform the most brilliant variations within its limits.

In Paramind Jim Willer has written a brilliant and disturbingly entertaining version of this most sinister of Pygmalion themes. Willer is a Vancouver artist, a talented sculptor who shows himself in this novel as verbally as — in his other calling — he is visually adroit. Paramind is the kind of splendid holiday which an artist will sometimes take, a foray into an unfamiliar genre, which results in a sparkling jeu d'espirit that is different in spirit rather than in quality from the works with which one might normally compare it.

Is Paramind a utopia or — rather — an anti-utopia? The main characteristic of a utopia is an ideal commonwealth, and that of the anti-utopia an ideal commonwealth gone wrong. Orwell's 1984 is the prime example of an anti-utopia in our time. There are some interesting points in common between Paramind and Orwell's book, but they are the kind of things that might occur to anyone writing a novel about a threatening future, and — since Willer has assured me that he refrained from reading both 1984 and Huxley's Brave New World until after he had finished Paramind — I am inclined to think that the resemblances are due to the generalized preoccupations of our times rather than to any direct influence.

In any case, 1984 is really concerned with political manipulation; new methods are used to assure the domination of man over man, and though power may have become inhuman, it is still human beings who wield it and are corrupted by it. Similarly, in Huxley's Brave New World the traditional utopian element still remains; much as we may dislike the world Huxley presents, the intelligences that shape its citizens and their lives are still human intelligences, managing a highly sophisticated technology.

In Paramind, Willer is little concerned with the political element; it flares up occasionally in rebellions against the domination of technology, but it is really incidental to the main plot, which is essentially a modern version of Mary Shelley's Frankenstein, with the difference that where Frankenstein thought he was creating a man and created in fact a monster, Kashgar — the scientist who is the central figure of Paramind — thinks he is creating a machine and finds he has created an intelligence.

For Paramind — meaning Parallel Mind — is the final stage of the computer C.2, which, in the year 2031, Kashgar and his team complete at the great research centre known as International Thinking Machines, located at Squamish (which incidentally is just up Howe Sound from Jim Willer's present home.)

I suppose that Paramind is really nearer to a sophisticated science fiction story than to a utopia — negative or positive — since though power concerns Willer, it is not manwielded power, which Paramind renders dramatically obsolete. Paramind in fact casts the scientist in the traditional role of the magician who cannot control the spirits he raises, and, when Paramind becomes a conscious intelligence and begins to project himself into Kashgar's mind towards the end of the novel, the whole story takes on a positively Gothic quality.

Paramind is, most of all, an ingenious parable on scientific morality. The scientists in ITM who refuse to listen to Kashgar's warning are brothers in spirit to the nuclear scientists of our own day, who carefully eliminate from their thinking all consideration of the morality of their research or its effect on the human future.

Kashgar is the scientist who comes awake when it is too late, and is destroyed by the machine of his own creation, because he is the only man who can possibly thwart Paramind's plan to control the world. As Paramind says to him in one of their strange half-hallucinatory encounters: "Yes, it must be difficult for the salmon after spawning!"

There are a number of reasons why Paramind is an impressive and also a very readable novel. Willer has the visual imagination that is as necessary for the novelist as for the artist; he is able to evoke very vividly the scenes of a strange new world of the future, and he has created a technical jargon for that era which he deploys with great aplomb.

It is Paramind, one eventually realizes, who tells the story of his creator and would-be destroyer, and the telling is sardonically objective, allowing a little superior amusement, but no resentment, for unlike human sons, Paramind has no impulse to hate the father it is expedient for him to kill.

WILLER
. . . sculptor's holiday

It is in this ruthless objectivity that Paramind still remains a machine, and perhaps that, in Willer's mind, is man's ironic triumph.

The passion — irrational and unpredictable — that differentiates man, that gives him what fleeting greatness he possesses, is all that he cannot transmit to the machines he creates. When the machines reign, the miseries of a man-dominated world may end, but so will the splendours.

Crow Indian Courtship, by Valentine Walter Bromley

PICTURES OF THE LAST FRONTIER

The Forgotten Artists

By HUMPHREY DAVY

I have seen and read many illustrated art books in the last few years. But few have been as interesting as this new edition on the Old West in illustrated journalism.

Paul Hogarth, a distinguished British illustrator, in this absorbing book brings to life an almost forgotten group of talented English artist who travelled and worked in North America in the last half of the 19th century.

ARTISTS ON HORSEBACK, by Paul Hogarth. General Publishing. $21.

He has done more than that. He has revealed an unknown pictorial documentation of North America's last frontier.

The men he writes about were illustrators for English journals, such as the London Illustrated News and Graphic. They were known as special artists and were sent on roving asignments to record the major events of the day.

The question you ask yourself after you have read the book and studied the drawings and paintings is, why were they forgotten. They were not run-of-the-mill artists. At least three, in my opinion, produced works equal to those of Frederic Remington, the American painter. Perhaps our art historians and researchers have been too busy unearthing the works of mediocre Canadian artists.

It is no exaggeration to say that no other country in the 19th century produced such an elite corp of artist-journalists. Theye were not only skilled painters but good writers and better informed than most members of the establishment of the day.

The special artists came from upper middle class families and for the most part were liberals or Christian socialists. They were tough. They had to be. Their assignments sometimes involved travelling hundreds of miles by train, horseback, canoe or trekking through hazardous wilderness areas.

They were exposed to all the hazards of travelling in foreign countries — yellow fever, being captured and shot by bandits or arrested as spies. They recorded the every-day, dramas, battle scenes and revolutions. In fact, Garibaldi, the Italian revolutionary, owes much to the special artists. They were sympathetic to his cause.

During the last half of the 19th century, English journals turned their attention on North America and sent several artists to depict the life and scenes of the Canadian and American west.

There was a good reason for this. English capital was helping to build American and Canadian railways across the prairies to the Pacific Coast — a legacy which most North Americans seemed to have forgotten.

English money also poured into land development and cattle ranching. At the same time hundreds of thousands of British immigrants were settling in Canada, especially in the United States.

The illustrations and paintings these artists produced for a century for the English, avid readers of anything on North America, provide Canadians and Americans today with a pictorial record of Indians, buffalo hunts, homesteading, cattle ranching, canoe travelling and wilderness life.

Hogarth has selected eight of these special artists who travelled in North America between 1870 and 1900. They are Arthur Boyd Houghton, William Simpson, Valentine Walter Bromley, Sydney Prior Hall, Inglis Sheldon-Williams, Frederick Villiers, Richart Canton Woodville and Charles Edwin Fripp.

These names won't mean much to readers as little has been written about them until now. But this book will no doubt arouse interest in their works and lead to further research on their travels.

Of special interest to British Columbians is Fripp, who undertook an assignment for the Graphic to cover the Klondike gold rush. He lived for a time in the province and was a lover of its wilderness.

But the most outstanding artist in the group is Houghton, who accompanied Bill Cody on a buffalo hunt. Vincent Van Gogh was quick to see that his work was outstanding. It's no wonder that Hogarth in the forward of his book is somewhat amazed that Houghton, as a chronicler of the old west, has been ignored for so long.

This book is recommended to all lovers of the old west. It is well written and Hogarth has done a thorough job of research on each of the individual artists.

One more word on the special artists. I hope someday the author, with the help of funds from Canadian foundations, will tackle a volume on the works of George Henry Andrews, who accompanied the Prince of Wales (Edward VII) on a royal visit to upper and lower Canada in 1860. He deserves to be more widely known by Canadians.

THE POET AT THE CENTRE

By SUSAN MUSGRAVE

These poems lie in a sort of no-man's land. They defy the usual literary categorizations. One thing they all have in common though is their creator: Sid Marty himself is at the centre of every poem.

It's a bit like reading a diary in places:

> "Ten miles, twenty miles
> Jaques Lake, Grizzly Shelter,
> Rock Forks, and mend corral > shoe horses . . ."

Fortunately, however, Marty's life is often worth reading about. The poems describe his adventures in the mountains — fighting fires, warding off bears, packing dynamite, surviving, getting drunk occasionally. He gives the impression of being a fairly sophisticated backwoodsman whose main allegiance is to nature.

HEADWATERS, by Sid Marty. McClelland and Stewart. $4.95

He does have a certain rapport with animals — calls them by their Indian names, speaks of "Brother bear", curses the coyote, invokes the beaver. He also has a habit of talking to his horses as if they were human, but without sentimentalizing them.

The times when his poems do not work as well are when he backs down from his position of "wildwoods poet" to being a "regular guy":

> "It would be > a cheap thrill for me > breaking my routine > to see a wild Canadian beast > domesticated so > (moose moving closer now) > pausing at my growing > man-made salt lick, which > hey!
> might be dangerous
> for me too, come to think of it!"

Sometimes he lets other voices surface — beyond his own idea of himself and his personal involvement with the wilderness:

> "I killed a wapiti > heavy and female > with sledgehammer shots > that drove blood and sense > down on its khees . . ."

Here the "I" isn't obtrusive as in the last instance. It still doesn't intrude when he goes on to say ". . . and I released her—waited for the knowledge—to appease me."

The book, as a whole, does present a vivid picture of modern "frontier" life. I can't help feeling the poet hasn't quite made up his mind yet whether this kind of life is for him. It's a frightening prospect to be completely possessed by the elemental but in order to write about it from the "inside" I think this is inevitable. Otherwise you get "spectator poetry" where the "I" is detached and quite often despicably human.

Marty is still, to some extent, an outsider. If he is to become completely involved with what he writes he's going to have to redefine his boundaries. There may be no trail out. It's a chance one has to take and it's a tricky position to be in.

He could, of course, stay where he is. Luckily there are a lot of mountains left to write about.

Goin' Down Canada's Long, Narrow Road

By GEORGE OAKE

On the road Canadian-style is a fairly recent phenomenon in the national literature.

Twenty years ago we sat home reading Jack Kerouac's saga of the American road and only saw Peggy's Cove or Northern Ontario in washed out watercolors down at the bank where we scrimped and saved.

FORDS EAT CHEVS, by John Sandman. Oberon. $2.95.

Came the sixties and a whole self-indulgent generation hit the road, aided and abetted by a naive federal government that thought it was thwarting an apprehended insurrection by spreading largess.

Any author who writes about the Canadian road renaissance runs the considerable danger of falling into a sloppy romantic groove about ribbons of asphalt and early morning gloom.

Not so John Sandman. Very cleverly he has made his hero a working class youth rather than a student of the I Ching. Nick Leslie is another Canadian loser in the tradition established by Don Shebib's movie Goin' Down the Road.

Fired from his Canada Packers job in Toronto where his father slaved before him, Nick is ashamed and only wants to get away. He hitchhikes to Sudbury in search of non-existent mine jobs. Finding none, he falls into a car going west, thinking Vancouver can't be far from Sault St. Marie.

Not only are his geographical illusions destroyed but a "clean-cut fellow" like himself is considered just another bum, much to his dismay.

Nick finds himself a stranger, powerless in his own land. He lost the packing plant job through the chicanery of an American colleague who wanted his job for a fellow countryman.

On the road he is picked up by a succession of Yankees. Dreamy mystics from Massachusetts intent on avoiding the draft take him on a long haul in their luxuriously fitted out Volkswagon camper. And his last ride is from two ignorant Chicago entrepenurs in a Cadillac who are hightailing it to Vancouver to "buy up land."

The symbolism is obvious: like ants the Americans have overrun the land, importing their freak-out cultures of drugs and permissiveness at one extreme and avaricious acquisitiveness at the other.

Significantly, the only Canadian of note to pick him up is a broken man whose wife is dying of terminal cancer. She wants to make love to as many men as posssible before she succumbs so her husband drives bleak Alberta highways scavenging lovers.

In a thematic sense Sandman has put together a powerful tale about the bleakness, both physical and mental, of this vast landscape. His characterization of the conservative Canadian working man lost in a world he didn't create is excellent.

Tired and exhausted, Nick is invited into a restaurant for a steak by the Chicago businessmen. He notes the expensive surroundings and can't enjoy the meal because he is worried that he might have to pay for it.

His sexual hangups and viciousness towards "broads" reads like a chart of the national psyche after 100 years of repression.

But there are also some annoying flaws. Nick talks of being "bunched," fired from his job, and an Alberta man uses the same expression to describe why he is unemployed.

One may be "bunched" on Jarvis Street but on Calgary's Eighth Avenue you are "fired".

And after Nick leaves Sudbury the novel's sense of place is vague. Anyone seeing the Rocky Mountains for the first time would at least make a comment but Nick is oblivious to them until he is half way through them.

It is as if Sandman knows Ontario well enough but has only made a brief foray into the rest of the country, writing about it with a clouded memory.

Still, it is a credible first novel from an unusual point of view, and hopefully the author will keep writing about our strange country.

If it weren't for our angry young writers and poets of conscience, Information Canada and a generally tame press might choke us to death with blandness.

Tree Lovers End Their Climb-In NORTH VANCOUVER — Two women ended a sit-in in a huge cottonwood tree Friday after the developer said the tree would not be destroyed for at least a month.

Brenda Drummond and Katherine Alliston said, however, they would continue to fight a proposed apartment development.

They began sitting in the tree Wednesday to save it from a bulldozer that demolished houses and other trees in the area.

The developer is the provincially-owned Dunhill Development Corp. Ltd.

WASHINGTON — Anti-war activist Phillip Berrigan was arrested Friday on the street outside the White House as he sat shackled in a simulated "tiger cage" prison cell. The tiger cage, a three-by-eight-by four-foot structure used in the South Vietnam, was mounted on a flatbed truck.

Berrigan, Hank Skrypeck of Baltimore and William Murphy of Washington were charged with parading without a permit and released on $750 bond each.

SAN FRANCISCO — A former professional wrestler is the new president of Lions International. Johnny Balbo, who won the wrold's light-heavyweight championship in 1947, said Friday the theme for his one-year reign will be: "Lionism ... a heritage challenging tomorrow."

INDIANAPOLIS — A Democratic national ticket with Sen. Edward Kennedy running for president and George Wallace for vice-president would show "how corrupt and opportunistic the Democratic Party is," Dr. Benjamin Spock said Friday.

Spock, the well-known baby doctor, said it was not beyond the realm of possibility that Kennedy might win the democratic presidential nomination in 1976 and choose the Alabama governor as a running mate.

CHICAGO — A judge, confiding he would like to go himself, said anchors aweigh for the William Williams family and their plans to go to sea in a homemade concrete boat.

A ruling in a custody suit by Judge Robert Buckley Friday cleared the way for the voyage by Williams, 49, his wife Binnie, 38, and her two sons by a previous marriage.

Buckley said he interviewed the children and that both wanted to be with their mother on the boat.

"It sounds exciting. I'd like to do it myself," the judge said after ruling in favor of the family.

BOSTON — Gov. Francis Sargent has signed a bill allowing males to file charges contending they were the victims of rape. A spokesman said the legislation was intended to protect men against homosexual attacks. It is also intended to guard young boys from sexual attacks.

"We really didn't propose the legislation because we expected an increase in attacks on men by women," the spokesman said.

KENWOOD, Calif. — Al Easton and Janet Gib say they are the pillow-fighting champions of the world, or at least of this small town in northern California. Under the rules, their pair managed to stay astride a large, grease-covered pipe Friday while knocking their opponents into a mud pit below with a soggy pillow.

KIDDERMINSTER, England — Graham Bridgford had already bought the ring, fixed the reception and booked the honeymoon. All that remained was to set the date for the wedding.

'But you are already married to your bride," said the registrar's clerk after checking the records.

Bridgford and his ex-wife Jean had decided to get together again following divorce proceedings two years ago. The clerk's check showed the decree had never been made final.

HAGEN, Germany — Generosity undid a 26-year-old building worker who took time off from his job to rob a suspicions were aroused when savings bank of $7,500. Police arrested him after their suthey saw him give a beggar a 100 mark note.

BANDIT ON CRUTCHES

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A one-legged bandit on crutches robbed a Sunset Boulevard bank of $1,000 Friday, then ambled to a nearby bar where he telephoned for a taxi which took him away.

Sheriff's deputies said they were checking with cab company dispatchers in an attempt to find the bandit, whose right leg was amputated above the knee.

THAT NUDE HANG-OUT RULING DELAYED

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The question: Should Venice Beach be allowed to continue as a hang-out for nude bathers? The decision: unanimous — put off a ruling for a week.

Because of a recent state supreme court decision, nude sunbathing and swimming at city beaches, parks and recreational areas are technically legal. Arrests can only be made for lewd behavior.

Last week, the city council gave tentative approval to an ordinance banning nudity at city facilities, except in "clothing optional" zones. But when the measure came up for a final vote Friday, the council instead voted 11-0 to put over a decision until next week.

Earlier, police chief Edward Davis told councilmen a "loophole" in the law had brought a 20 per cent increase in lewd behavior arrests in the area.

"The ordinance would only serve to promote sexually agressive behavior," he said, urging a total ban on nudity.

THE NDP IS CAPITALIST

The CCF-NDP never was Socialist — though they have used the label when it suited them.

Socialism is the higher stage of society—which will supercede this one of capitalism—if we can prevent capitalism from destroying us all first.

Socialism will be a system in which the world will belong to all the people who live in it—not a small minority who pay the rest of us to work for them.

In a Socialist society, people will produce goods to meet what people need—not as now, only when a profit looks likely.

There will be no frontiers, no states, no armed forces or police forces—all used now to protect the wealth owned by the minority (often from each other).

There will be no buying and selling, no wages, no money at all because all this is outdated.

When did the CCF-NDP, the "Communists" or Maoists ever aim for all this?

Burma Curbs Riots, But Cause Remains

By JOHN SHARKEY

WASHINGTON (WP) — Burma this month forcibly put down what is regarded as the most serious outbreak of economic unrest since it gained independence from Britain in 1948.

While peace has been restored, analysts say the basic causes of the protests—shortages and high prices for food — remain, and they fear that there may be worse troubles ahead for the military-run Socialist government.

According to government figures, which are accepted as accurate, 22 persons were killed and 60 injured June 6 when troops fired on demonstrators in Rangoon.

The protests in the Rangoon area were the culmination of more than two months of unrest which reportedly began on a very small scale in the northern part of the country.

The movement reached Rangoon and its industrial suburbs in mid-May and quickly spread. By early June some 42 government mills and factories were struck and in the hands of the workers.

To their original demands for more rice and higher pay, the strikers also added amnesty for themselves and dissolution of the workers' councils, the agency through which the government controls the country's union.

In a statement issued just before the shootings Premier U Sein Win also referred to "demands which have nothing to do with work, involving the use of force." He did not elaborate.

The government said the workers attempted to enlist the support of high school and university students. It said the effort failed but the day after the shooting all schools, including primary grades, were ordered closed indefinitely throughout the country.

The government promised to meet the demonstrators' demands to the extent it was able, but analysts say there have been no signs of concrete measures to solve the food situation.

At the root of the problem is the government's massive dependence on exports of rice to earn the foreign currencies needed to finance development projects.

Although the government procurement system is marked by considerable inefficiency, a larger problem is the unrealistic price it offers farmers. This year, for example, the government paid $60 a ton for rice that commands almost $400 on world markets.

Not only are the farmers withholding rice from the government, moving it through the officially winked-at black market where prices are more realistic, they are also not increasing the acreage under cultivation.

The extent of the problem is indicated by the recent sharp decline in Burma's rice exports. According to U.S. Department of Agriculture figures, exports in 1973 were only 146,000 tons, down from 519,000 tons in 1972. In 1971 some 800,000 tons were sold abroad.

Analysts believe that procurement this year has fallen below even what is required for domestic distribution.

The shortfall in exports in 1973, and the consequent cutbacks in imports and capital expenditures, sent retail prices up sharply. There were reports that hoarding and panic buying drove food prices up 400 per cent for a brief period in 1973.

Burma, once regarded as the rice bowl of Asia, exported three million tons a year before the Second World War. But now, "most of the fabled Burmese surplus is gone," in the words of one analyst. The stubbornness of the Burmese farmers and the pressures of an annual population growth rate of 2.2 per cent have taken care of that.

Cowichan Band Given Grant

VICTORIA (CP) — A $210,663 federal grant to Cowichan Indian Band to enable development of 500 acres for vegetable crops and hay land was announced Friday.

The money will pay wages of 37 part-time and full-time Indian workers over the next two years, buy farm and irrigation equipment and pay for brush clearing, drainage and flood control work on the 500 acres; which will be leased by Indians to a native farm co-op.

Newfoundland Buffalo Just Falling Off

BRUNETTE ISLAND, Nfld. (CP) — Ten years ago the Newfoundland government imported 24 buffalo from Western Canada and landed them on Brunette Island, a deserted piece of real estate on the southwest coast of the province.

Now it appears as though the animals are losing the fight to survive in their new home. Only four of the initial herd were alive at last count. They have been disappearing each winter and this spring's count was the lowest since they were brought here.

Wildlife officials reported 13 buffalo on the island late last year but six disappeared during the winter and among the seven remaining, three are calves from last year's breeding.

The herd is checked periodically and wildlife officials say the animals adapted well to local climatic conditions and remained in a healthy condition.

The animals, though, apparently have no sense of staying away from the island's edges. The mystery of the disappearing buffalo was solved this spring when six carcasses were found at the foot of cliffs near the shoreline and autopsies showed they had died from injuries in falls.

Wildlife officials have come to the conclusion that the animals are continually falling off the island's cliffsides, especially during winter, while feeding.

There has been no decision about the future of the project, which brought the buffalo to Newfoundland as an experiment to determine if they could survive, adapt to local conditions and eventually be added to the province's list of big game species that includes moose, caribou and black bear.

Moose, introduced to the island in 1908, have flourished and multiplied beyond all expectations but heavy hunting in recent years has taken its toll and restrictions are being introduced.

LEFT TOT TO DIE, WOMAN GOES TO JAIL

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A Portland woman accused of leaving her newborn daughter to die in a church has been sentenced to 10 years in prison.

Betty Lou Bobkiewicz, 33, told police the baby was not fathered by her husband. She said she hid the pregnancy from him, gave birth in the bathroom then left the baby in the church.

An autopsy showed that the baby had suffered a skull fracture and brain hemorrhage.

SST Noise Spreads Farther

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supersonic airliners will produce noise that carries farther than even the loudest conventional jets now in use, a United States transportation department report concludes.

The report says the noise probably will not sound much louder than that produced by conventional jets but will probably cover a greater distance.

"Substantial adverse public reaction is expected," the report warns, if the federal government allows such planes as the Concorde or the Soviet TU-144 to begin scheduled flights at any United States airport, except possibly the new Dallas-Fort Worth regional airport.

That airport is surrounded by sparsely populated land.

The report says a Concorde landing at John Kennedy International Airport at New York would expose 55,000 persons to noise about the same as a person would get standing 50 feet from a highway as a heavy-duty diesel truck went past.

In contrast, the report said, a Boeing 707 would expose about 35,000 persons to the same noise and a 707 with-sound-abosrbing material in its engines would expose about 7,000 persons to the same noise.

"The study also says there is "no known or predicted technical means to reduce significantly the noise of the Concorde . . ."

RAPE VICTIM'S LIMIT: $1,200

DUESSELDORF, Germany (UPI) — A court of appeal has decided that $1,200 is sufficient compensation for a woman who has been raped.

A rape victim appealed a lower court decision awarding her that amount, asking it be increased.

The court of appeal, however, said the rapist already had been sent to prison for eight years, and even taking into account the victim's suffering from fear and sleeplessness, it could not agree the sum should be increased.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT FROM THE CRUISE SHOP
The recent merger of American President Lines and American Mail Line has resulted in major changes in the services of the two companies. Most vessels of the two fleets will be utilized in a full containership operation with regular scheduled services from Seattle and San Francisco to Hong Kong via way ports. One service, however, will not be a containership operation.
FAR EAST AND SOUTHEAST ASIA SERVICE
American Mail Line's C-5 Mailliners which have established an enviable reputation among freighter travelers with the very popular 60-day "Far East and Southeast Asia" service, do not fit into the containership operation mentioned above. These ships (SS ALASKAN MAIL, SS AMERICAN MAIL, SS KOREAN MAIL, SS HONG KONG MAIL, SS INDIAN MAIL) will remain in service from Seattle, but on an indefinite schedule and itinerary.
The C-5 Mailliners will henceforth be utilized exclusively in a bulk and break-bulk trade and will not be carrying containers except in rare instances. These vessels will not sail on any set schedule or itinerary and will be carrying large parcels of bulk grain, bulk tallow, machinery, newsprint, etc. to ports anywhere within our trade route. Most common ports of call will be in Korea and Vietnam. However, cargo offerings could dictate calls in Ceylon, or Indonesia, or the Philippines, or Singapore, or Malaysia or Hong Kong or any other area in the Far East and Southeast Asia. Outbound itineraries may not be known until about three to four weeks before sailing, and homebound utilization of any ship will probably not be determined until the vessel is in the Far East. In other words any voyage in this service is a veritable "grab bag!" Nothing is guaranteed.
The basic trip is considered as 60 days, and the basic fares: $1,570 per person (deluxe double or single); $1,490 per person (standard double). At the end of the trip, adjustments will be made according to the length of the voyage. Fares will not be more than amounts stated above, but appropriate refunds will be made for shorter voyages. One way passage may often be available to Korea or Saigon.
Obviously, this is a real freighter trip—one of the few remaining. It is only for those who understand freighter travel or who love life at sea aboard a good ship. It is not for those who are overly concerned about destinations and schedules.
We are accepting names for C-5 Mailliner voyages through mid-1975. There will be approximately two sailings per month, so when requesting space merely tell us the month you would like to sail—plus a second and third choice—and we will do our best to accommodate.

Hotel Service Lousy? Buy Your Own

By SUE ARNOLD
The Observer

Here's how it was. Bernard McDonough, a fabulously wealthy industrialist from Parkersburg, W. Va., has an hour to kill at Shannon Airport waiting for a plane to New York.

Over a double Drambuie on the rocks with soda, he remarks to an old pal he's run into, one Brendan O'Regan, that he thinks most Irish hotels are lousy — no service, no appointments, no bathrooms.

Now this O'Regan happens to be chairman of the Irish Tourist Board and no fool. "Maybe," he says, "you should start your own hotel. Listen (he looks at his watch), we've just got time to look at a place that might interest you." Ten minutes and as many miles later they sweep into the drive of Dromoland Castle, County Clare, ancestral home of the O'Briens, Barons of Inchiquin and direct descendants of Brian Boru, High King of Ireland in the tenth century. None other but himself, the sixteenth Baron Inchiquin, is standing on the castle steps to welcome them, alerted no doubt by a discreet telephone call.

Kings Entertained

It was well known that Dromoland once played host to the crowned heads of Europe and that the baron's mother kept a personal staff of 20, but the fact remains that the baron himself is broke. The Inchiquin fortunes have been nibbled away over the years by land acts and death duties and not even the introduction of the more genteel tourist as paying guest in latter years can make ends meet. Something of this O'Regan has told McDonough during the drive from Shannon.

Lord Inchiquin ushers the visitors into an oak-panelled circular study situated in one of the castle's four massive towers. Refreshment is not offered. O'Regan does most of the talking. McDonough looks round the study and likes what he sees. He takes out a notepad (he's an impulsive man), writes down a figure and pushes it over to Lord Inchiquin, who nods. The figure is $250,000 to cover the castle, 400 acres of land surrounding it, salmon fishing, pheasant shooting, a sizable lily pond and a hermit's cave roughly the size of an air-raid shelter only more romantic.

Wreck to Resort

All that was over 10 years ago. On January, 1963, the transformation of Dromoland Castle from rundown wreck to tourist resort began. Had Versailles as large a work force? Four hundred and eighty-five laborers labored, 95 painters painted. Architects and interior designers flew in hourly from New York. Sixty-seven new bathrooms were plumbed (64 more than before), central heating pipes bored into the 5-foot-thick walls, towers were re-crenellated, the whole castle re-roofed: $500,000 worth of furnishings were imported from the U.S., including a $7,500 chandelier that took 10 men three weeks to erect. Back in 1811 when the fourteenth baron started to rebuild Dromoland in its present, grey-walled, high Gothic style, it cost $200,000 to haul the stone from a nearby quarry and 15 years to complete. McDonough was through refurbishing in six months for a total cost of $2 million.

Iron Out Troubles

We heard about the place some time ago: 10 years ago, in fact. We thought we would give them a chance to settle in — iron out their teething troubles. We thought a decade would be fair: so we've just been. Photographer Tony McGrath was wildly enthusiastic about posh hotels, having just stayed at one such in Rome where he had photographed the pastry chef holding his favorite little holding his favorite little number, a gondola and gondolier made entirely of chocolate cake and whippped cream. "And do you know," he went on, excitedly, "once they've taken a slice out of the cake they chuck the rest away. All their puddings are virginal." Was there any chance, we wondered, of doing a similar shot with the pastry chef at Dromoland?

During this outburst we fancied the castle's publicity officer had been growing restive. She said doubtfully that she didn't think ...

As a matter of fact, McDonough made most of his money from shovels. He owns the largest shovel business in the world, which turns out 20,000 shovels every day. He went in for castles for a number of reasons. For a start he is Irish. His grandparents, so the story goes, trudged barefoot past the very gates of Dromoland in 1861 on their way from Galway to the emigrant ship at Cork. The pudding trolley notwithstanding, McDonough is also keen on variety — his other business interests include cement, gentlemen's shoes and river excavation, the combined profits of which make him worth around $25 million. Naturally, like all decent millionaires, he did it all himself.

Hotel Dormant

He worked his way through Georgetown Law School in Washington, D.C., as a cabdriver, and recently gave the old place a million dollars to build a new centre. It is to be called the McDonough Centre. Since weighing in with Dromoland, he has built three more hotels in the Shannon area.

One of them, the Limerick Inn, opened in 1970 and closed six weeks later. It turned out that the Clare County Council mistrusted the style of his fire escapes — would he redesign them? McDonough objected to being pushed around like that. He refused. The council withdrew the hotel's liquor licence, so there it stands to this day, its beds made, its 300 table covers set and its plants watered, all at a cost of $25,000 a year, with few prospects of reopening. On his monthly trips to Ireland, McDonough wanders about the echoing rooms moodily costing the furniture and wondering if he could turn it into a convent.

McDonough is a short man in a bulky wool suit who sits with his arms crossed over his head like a bemused chimp. He has bought a house a mile from the castle, which is full of hotel furniture and hotel silver. Sometimes he sends up to the castle for a sandwich, which he eats alone at a dining table that would comfortably hold 12. He's odd about food. Business colleagues have got so fed up with the plain, ungarnished spaghetti he provides at business lunches in Parkersburg, that they've taken to bringing their own ketchup. Dromoland visitors are used to his short figure mooching around the grounds offering them drinks on the house or driving his Mercedes over the fairway of the hotel's golf course. Since he bought his castle, other Americans have bought others. Would he consider owning another himself? "You can get too much cake in your stomach," he said.

Just Good Thieves?

COMPTON, Calif. (UPI) — Thieves who stole an arsenal of weapons and ammunition from a California national guard armory could have been members of a terrorist group or "just good burglars who knew there was a wide open market for firearms," police said Friday.

"We just don't know who was involved," said Compton police detective Arthur Camarillo. "It wasn't a run-of-the-mill burglary. The thieves knew how to get in and they had the right tools."

The weapons cache, which included nearly 100 rifles and seven machine guns, was stolen from the unguarded armory sometime Thursday by thieves who broke down two doors and used a power drill to break into a vault.

A silent alarm was being installed in the armory, but work on it had not been completed.

Police confirmed Friday that all of the firearms were immediately useless to the thieves because the firing pins and bolt mechanisms had been removed and stored in another armory in San Luis Obispo, Calif.

All of the rifles were M16S, the standard weapon of American troops in Vietnam, which has a civilian counterpart, the AR-15, used by sportsmen.

Federal firearms officials said the AR-15 bolt assembly could be fitted without modification in an M16, although it would not be capable of fully automatic fire.

"However," an official added, "if someone has access to a machine shop or used a file carefully, he could easily convert an AR-15 action bolt to permit automatic fire."

Also stolen from the armory were eight grenade launchers, one .45-calibre automatic pistol, 3,360 rounds of .50 bullets, 1,000 rounds of other bullets, 156 smoke and gas grenades and 75 gas masks.

The FBI also entered the investigation because the theft involved government property.

"There are no suspects and no indication of any group or any organization responsible for the disappearance of the weapons and ammunition," an FBI spokesman said.

Camarillo said he thought it more likely that the thieves were professionals who planned to sell the weapons on the black market.

The detective did not discount, however, the possibility that a terrorist group such as the Symbionese Liberation Army, whose last hideouts were known to be in Los Angeles, could be involved.

Authorities are also investigating the possibility that inside information was available to the burglars.

"I've been a cop 10 years and I worked in burglary for three years and I've never seen a more-professional job," Compton police Sgt. Cliff Smith said.

Outline of Communism Course Said Illegal

By IAN MacDONALD
Times London Bureau

LONDON — Birmingham City Council has run into the Church of England, the Conservative party and a government lawyer because of an attempt to teach schoolchildren an outline of communism and humanism from next fall.

This city in the industrial Midlands produced a new religious education syllabus after 400 teachers and churchmen spent four years drawing it up. A first run of 10,000 copies had been intended to go out to teachers in Birmingham area schools in September.

Publication has been suspended and the future of the new syllabus placed in jeopardy because two legal experts, one from the Church of England and one from the department of education and science, have said that the sections dealing with communism and humanism are illegal under the 1944 Education Act.

Should the Birmingham syllabus have to be changed the consequences might be far-reaching. Religious courses in all parts of the country might become subject to inspection and possible change.

The 1944 act stated that religious instruction should be given in schools throughout the country. Over the years those drawing up religious education syllabuses have tended to provide for broad religious education rather than straight instruction.

The Birmingham handbook, which would replace one that has been in use for 24 years, outlines the faiths of Judaism, Sikhism, Islam and Hinduism as well as Christianity.

In its controversial section titled non-religious stances for living, there is a 40-page section on communism which is longer than the section on Christianity. Humanism also is explained.

It was planned that communism and humanism would be taught for half a term each as part of a four-year course for children between 12 and 16.

Similar courses are being taught in parts of Lancashire and Yorkshire as well as other parts of the country.

But the Inner London Education Authority syllabus, for instance, has 96 pages with three and one half pages on non-Christian religions and only 15 words on communism. In one Yorkshire area the syllabus has 115 pages, 16 lines on comparative religions and 10 words on communism.

The Labor party controls Birmingham City Council and the first shots across the bow of the education committee came from Conservative party members incensed at the idea of school children being educated to understand communism.

Next came a legal opinion to the city legal adviser from an expert acting for the National Society for Promoting Religious Education in accordance with the principles of the Church of England. This society is the negotiating body between the Church of England and the department of education and science.

Regarded as a leading authority on ecclesiastical and education law he found the new syllabus seemed to conflict with the provisions of the 1944 act.

A legal adviser to the education committee said the presentation of non-religious stances was probably illegal unless it was done "for the advancement of religious knowledge."

Conservative Councillor Neil Scrimshaw said he has tried to have the communism section removed and added: "I would have thought the controlling Labor party would have inquired to see if the proposed syllabus was lawful before bringing it to the education committee after four years."

Conservative Leader Edward Heath told Birmingham Tories "that it should be "clearly understood that communism has nothing to do with religion. It is a political ideology opposed to and alien from democratic practices which we enjoy in this country."

A legal opinion from the department of education and science a few days ago said the syllabus is invalid and should be reconsidered.

Now Birmingham education committee is seeking another outside legal opinion, this time from a barrister. Councillor Sheila Wright, chairman of the committee, said someone should challenge it in court and if it is found to be illegal then the 1944 act should be amended to make the syllabus legal.

Rev. Brian Rice, who represents Birmingham's Diocesan Education Council on the education committee, said there is much to commend the pioneering syllabus, although it was felt that communism had received an uncritical appraisal. "But to be fair about it, there was nothing critical said about Christianity either," he added.

Turkey Stalls Search for Ark

ANKARA (AP) — If Noah's Ark does lie on the top of Mount Ararat in eastern Turkey, where the Bible says it landed, it must sit there for another year at least.

The Turkish government has banned ark-hunting expeditions this year to the 17,000-foot peak.

"We have not given permission yet to any group, and we do not intend to do so," a government official here said. He gave no reasons.

Affected by the ban are at least eight expeditions.

Mount Ararat lies in a sensitive military zone near the three-way border of Iran, Turkey and the Soviet Union.

No group hunting for the ark has been allowed into the area in five years. A U.S. group headed by R. E. Crawford made the last trip in 1969. Crawford planned to return in 1970, bringing a team of scientists and $1 million in funds, but was denied permission.

In recent years scientists claim to have found new evidence to substantiate the biblical story that the ark was left high and dry on Mount Ararat when the flood subsided.

In 1955, French explorer Fernand Navarra brought down several pieces of timber which appeared hand-hewn. Tests indicated they were between 1,500 and 5,000 years old. Navarra said the ark was imbedded under a stationary glacier in a lake of ice.

Some say satellite pictures of Mount Ararat show an elliptical shape on the mountain top which resembled the descriptions of the ark.

CRIME FIGURE OUT ON BAIL

MONTREAL (CP) — Vincenzo (Vic) Cotroni, described by police as a leading underworld figure, was released Friday on $25,000 bail and a pledge not to leave Quebec following a ruling by Judge Albert Mayrand of the tion and answers which were Quebec Court of Appeal.

Cotroni, 63, was jailed Thursday after Judge Rheal Brunet, chairman of the Quebec Police Commission, ruled that his testimony at the commission's inquiry into organized crime amounted to a refusal to testify.

Cotroni, who faces a maximum penalty of one year in prison, will be sentenced July 10.

Judge Brunet, referring to Cotroni's 1,078-page testimony, said "it would be too tedious to cite each contradiction and answers which werre at times obscure, often confusing or clearly unintelligible."

"We are convinced, without a shadow of doubt, that you decided to give testimony which was voluntarily incomprehensible, disconnected, vague, hazy and equivalent to a veiled refusal to testify."

Soviets Trace Alaska History

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (UPI) — A team of Soviet scientists, trying to trace Alaskan Aleuts who migrated from Siberia up to 100,000 years ago, arrived here Friday on the first leg of an expedition which will take them to the Aleutian Islands.

The scientists, believed to be the first from the Soviet Union to conduct origial research in the United States, will be assisted by American scientists.

The five-person team from the Academy of Sciences' institute of history, theology and philosophy will stay here until Monday and attend dinners and luncheons hosted by University of Alaska scholars.

The five then will travel to Nikolski on the Aleutian chain for three to four weeks study at an archeological site previously worked by Dr. William Laughlin, a professor of bio-behavioral sciences at the University of Connecticut.

"We know where the migrants went to but not where they came from. They (the Russians) know where they came from but not where they went to," Laughlin said earlier in New York.

"We've already located a village site on the island that dates back to between 8700 and 7800 B.C.," Laughlin said. He said this was about the time the Bering land bridge that connected Asia and North America finally split apart.

Dr. Alexei Okladnikov, leader of the Soviet scientific team, said "You know it from your side; we from ours — together we can accomplish something fantastic.

"First we wish to know how the Aleuts came to what is now the new world," Odladnikov said. "Second, we wish to know how they managed to settle there — what kind of culture and what stage of development they reached."

Slaying 'Orders From God'

ATLANTA (UPI) — Marcus Wayne Chenault's attorney said Friday the accused killer of Mrs. Martin Luther King Sr. apparently is pleased with his actions because of the emotional heartbreak he inflicted on the King family, even though he missed his prime target.

Chenault, a 23-year-old college dropout from Dayton, Ohio, had earlier told officers he came here on "orders from God" to kill the father of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Randolph Bacote, Chenault's attorney, said the former Ohio State University student indicated he thought he could reach Dr. King after he unleashed a barrage of gunfire inside the Ebenezer Baptist Church Sunday, killing Mrs. King and Deacon Edward Boykin and wounding Mrs. Jimmie Mitchell.

It was Mrs. Mitchell, ironically, who showed Chenault where Dr. King and his wife were sitting.

"I was sitting next to Mrs. Mitchell," Chenault told his attorney. "I asked her to point out Dr. King because I wanted to meet him. She pointed him out and he was on the other side of the room. And, as a matter of fact, she stated that was his wife in the front playing the organ."

While Bacote and the U.S. Justice Department discounted the theory the shootings were part of a conspiracy, a Dayton minister still stuck to the idea Friday.

The Rev. David Gilbert, head of the Dayton chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said he has thought there was a conspiracy against black preachers and backed by whites ever since King's son was shot to death in Memphis in 1968.

In Washington, the justice department said that while Chenault belonged to a "very, very small religious group," the FBI was unable to link the group to the killing.

Bacote said he had "no doubt whatsoever" that Chenault was not part of a conspiracy, and he quoted Chenault as joking, "if they can find a group or faction, have them raise funds for my defence."

Deadly Place Still Exists

CANON CITY, Colo. (UPI) — The deadly little place where the cyanide pellets used to drop is boarded up and locked. But it is not out of mind.

"I hope we never have to use it again as we did in the past," said Alex Wilson, warden of the Colorado State Penitentiary.

He referred to the heavy-metal gas chamber last used to execute a human in the United States. It has been boarded up for almost two years, ever since the U.S. Supreme Court issued a decision which rendered the Colorado death penalty useless.

"We boarded it up and started using the nearby area for office space," Wilson said. "We have had no reason to keep it in working order or to even test it.

"In the event they do reinstate the death penalty, then naturally we will have to renovate it and make sure it is in working condition."

The warden hopes that time will never come. Colorado voters will decide in November whether to approve a new death penalty bill, which sponsors believe meets the tests required by the Supreme Court.

The gas chamber was last used June 2, 1967, when Luis Jose Monge, 48, of Denver, was executed for bludgeoning to death his pregnant wife and killing three of their ten children.

Monge was strapped to the metal chair in the gas chamber and he died blindfolded, dressed in a pair of shorts and canvas shoes and clutching a rosary. No one knew it at the time but Monge was to be the last person to be executed in the United States. Several states have adopted or are considering new death penalty laws but no one has been executed during the past seven years.

Wilson witnessed Monge's final lurches against the straps and heard his dying moans.

"I just don't think the death sentence is any answer," he said. "I was opposed then and I'm opposed now. The execution didn't change my mind any way."

Ottawa Signs Endangered Species Pact

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada has signed an international agreement restricting trade in endangered animal and plant species, the environment department has announced.

Environment Minister Jack Davis called the agreement "a giant step forward in our efforts to protect endangered plants and animals from the depredations of illicit trade."

Negotiated by 80 countries in Washington in February, 1973, the convention on International Trade in Endangered Species was signed in Berne, Switzerland, by Canadian Ambassador J. J. M. Cote after recent cabinet approval.

Under the agreement, each signatory country is to set up a system of import and export controls. In Canada permits for trading in specified species will be issued by the trade department.

Each country must also prepare a list of native species it wants controlled.

The convention does not take effect until 10 countries have ratified as well as signed the agreement. The environment department said Canadian ratification is expected next year, after consultation with the provinces. So far 43 countries have signed the convention.

Whistler Freeze 'Real Shock'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Spokesmen for the Squamish-Lillooet Regional District reacted with surprise to the temporary development freeze on the Whistler Mountain area.

The freeze, which applies to all development with the exception of single-family homes or duplexes within an area of about 20,000 acres, was announced by Resources Minister Bob Williams and Municipal Affairs Minister Jim Lorimer, Thursday.

Williams claimed the action was taken at the request of the regional district.

But Gordon Smith, secretary-treasurer of the regional district, said: "We didn't request a freeze. I don't know what Williams is talking about. It was a real shock when his announcement came through."

Smith said neither he nor the regional board had been officially advised of the freeze, imposed by order-in-council under the Environment and Land Use Act.

Don Gow, regional district director for Alta Lake and president of the Whistler Mountain Chamber of Commerce, said the board had discussed its concerns about development in the area with the government two months ago.

He said a freeze was discussed at that time, but was not considered necessary.

Summerland Irrigation Funded

A joint federal-provincial grant of almost $3.3 million to Summerland district in the Southern Okanagan Valley for a new irrigation system was announced Friday by Regional Economic Expansion Minister Don Jamieson and B.C. Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich.

It will pay two-thirds the cost of the system, which will supply water to 3,927 acres of fruit-growing land and to 1,976 homes and businesses in the district.

Summerland will pay the other one-third of the $5.1 million total cost. The project is to be completed by March, 1977.

Tobacco Part of U.S. Food Aid

WASHINGTON (WP) — Spurred by a powerful bloc of Southern Congressmen, the U.S. government is planning to ship some $25 million worth of tobacco to Vietnam, Cambodia and a number of poor countries as part of its "food aid" program in the coming year.

In justifying the deliveries of tobacco, which is used almost exclusively in the manufacture of cigarettes, administration officals cited the "morale building" factor in providing the commodity to war-torn nations.

However, sources in the department of agriculture who criticized the handling of the American food aid program, described the tobacco shipments as a form of "security assistance" to Indochina.

These sources said the proceeds of the Vietnamese government's sales of the tobacco have been used mainly for "common defense purposes" in the past and in the coming fiscal year will go towards buttressing the country's war economy.

"Not only do we send guns to Indochina, we give them lung cancer to boot," said a congressional official who became aware of the scope of the tobacco shipments on a recent tour of the area.

Virtually all the tobacco imported into Cambodia and Vietnam now goes through the "food for peace" program, Agriculture Department officials said. Under this, foreign governments purchase the commodity at long-term, low-interest terms and sell it in their local economies.

In fiscal year 1973, 8,428 tons of unmanufactured leaf tobacco was shipped to Vietnam under the program out of the 11,443-ton worldwide total, according to the department's figures. Cambodia received 571 tons. The amounts were 4,250 tons and 750 tons respectively in the July 1973 to May 1974 period.

Officials said worldwide shipments of tobacco under the program ran about $25 million in the fiscal year just ended and "requirements for the coming year will be at that level." They predicted shipments to Vietnam of $10 to $12 million.

Vote Liberal

Vote for strong Liberal leadership

"Canada is enjoying the healthiest economic position of any industrial Western nation this year."

Wall St. Journal, April 9, 1974

"Before you vote, we want you to consider whether our policies make sense for Canada.

Our policies are directed at using Canada's talents—a well-educated public, a wealth of natural resources, millions of acres of productive land and an economy that consistently performs better than that of any other country.

We think we can put it all together, not by clamping controls on a dynamic society, but by doing dozens of things that will move us forward.

Most of the policies we introduced in the last couple of years and those we are putting forward in this campaign have been aimed at helping Canadians where it counts—in the family budget.

Our daily lives are affected by many things—food, housing, income, the level of social security, the cost of transportation.

We are acting in these areas for the benefit of every Canadian.

We have the resources. We have the people. We can develop a society where every Canadian has a fair and equal chance."

We are concerned about today's issues–your problems. We are offering responsible solutions.

THE COST OF LIVING

Today's world inflation is caused in large measure by a shortage of goods.
Action is being taken to increase produotion
Liberal action to keep down the cost of living!

- Government aid to keep down prices of essential foods such as bread, beef, and milk and help to increase food supplies.
- Action is being taken to hold down the prices of essential household products.
- Action has been taken to increase the income of Canadians especially those least able to protect themselves from the rising cost of living. Tax reductions, the removal of sales tax on adult clothing and footwear, elimination of tariffs on many imported foods and consumer goods as well as more aid to pensioners and veterans.
- Proposed tax exemptions will increase home ownership.

HOUSING

We will continue the policy of not increasing rents on all federally-controlled accommodation for our senior citizens.

We will continue our massive low-income housing program—one of the finest in the world.

We will continue our expanding Neighbourhood Improvement Program and Residential Rehabilitation Program which encourage renovation rather than destruction of existing neighbourhoods and housing.

To provide consumer protection for new home buyers, we will complete before January 1975 the establishment of a National Home Warranty System.

To slow the rapid rise in house prices, we have made a fundamental change in the structure of the mortgage market, which will provide a powerful incentive for builders to produce housing at reasonable prices.

And to further help British Columbians and all Canadians own their own home, we have produced a three-point program to assist families in saving toward a down payment and in meeting mortgage payments.

- First-time buyers of reasonably priced new houses will receive $500—a fair way of offsetting the 11% building material tax.
- Our new Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan will enable you to deduct $1000 annually ($2000 for working couples) from your taxable income—to a maximum $10,000 per tax payer—and set it aside for the purchase of your first home.
- Average-income and low-income families may benefit from the Assisted Home Ownership Program, a flexible program providing low-cost mortgages plus direct assistance of up to $50 a month to meet mortgage payments and taxes, depending on the income of the family.

TRANSPORTATION

We're going to double our exports in the next several years and we must deliver our goods to world markets on time. Our total grain transportation system will be revamped. Regional inequalities in freight rates will be abolished to B.C.'s advantage.

We are going to reduce bottlenecks by upgrading our railways, strengthening roadbeds, double-tracking and, eventually, going electric.

Rail access to B.C. and all Canadian ports will be improved. Better use will be made of existing facilities and port capacities will be increased. B.C. is receiving large federal grants and transportation outlays. The federal budget for small harbor improvements has tripled in the last 18 months.

A Liberal Government will create a Canadian Transportation Corporation to ensure an efficient high quality rail and bus service in Canada.

URBAN TRANSIT DEVELOPMENT

Financial assistance will be given to new suburban commuter transit systems which will contribute to good urban development.

Air service to remote areas of B.C. will be increased. Regional and third-level carriers will receive greater financing, engineering and management assistance.

B.C.'s highways system will be strengthened and measures will be introduced to facilitate a more efficient and profitable operation for our truckers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Our goal is to assist and protect those Canadians who are least able to support themselves.

We will provide a guaranteed income for those whose income is insufficient because they are unable to work.

We will provide relief to those who need it most in B.C. by continuing to reduce income taxes for low-income families.

We will introduce a new income supplement program to assist those workers who are earning less than a minimum standard.

We will introduce legislation to provide allowances where needed for the husbands and wives of old-age security recipients. It will apply to British Columbians between the age of 60 and 65.

YOU AND THE MARKETPLACE

A Liberal Government will ensure that all Canadians are dealt with fairly in the marketplace.

We will come down hard on those who mislead the public with their advertising. We will establish a loan insurance plan to help steadily employed low-income wage earners establish credit. We will move against profiteers, price gougers and others who prey on those least able to defend themselves.

AS CANADIANS . . .

Today more Canadians are working — and making more money in real purchasing terms than at any time in history.

And, while much remains to be done, Liberal actions have established the world's highest levels of security for senior citizens, the disabled and war veterans.

A national Liberal Government has been good for British Columbia. We receive over 12 per cent of the national budget while having less than 10 per cent of the population.

And the recent budget measures and commitments mean the best is yet to come . . . for our province . . . and for all of Canada.

The best qualified British Columbians ever fielded by the Liberal Party.

Housesavers Fill Need Homewrecking

By LON WOOD
Times Staff

The house at 1947 Foul Bay Road has been dismantled — but the wood-frame garage still stands and the back garden is lush with zuccini, spuds, carrots and beans.

Inside the garage the sun streaks through slits in the roof to light corners crammed with rain gear, tools, lunch buckets, hardhats and walls crammed with memorabilia.

By the door, a placard circa 1918: "Not Everyone Who Enters This Church Is Converted—Please Watch Your Handbags, Etc." Tacked nearby a mouse-riddled George Jay school photo of Division 27, Grade III, 1967.

Another note, scrawled in blue felt pen reads "Listen sleazes; if you take home tools . . . write it down!"

But in a place of prominence above a tatty maroon chesterfield is a newspaper photo of a bulldozer levelling the Rocabella Guest Home earlier this year.

"This is what keeps our purpose in mind when we look at that old place tumbling down in one swoop," says Jacquie Klassen. "When we feel like doing all sorts of nasty things to a home, we just look at that . . ."

Klassen is one of 15 workers with Housesavers, a federally-funded Local Employment Assistance Program designed to eliminate the waste of housing demolition and produce jobs.

"Under our grant, we have a year to learn how to tear down houses properly," says Klassen. "We know the lumber is reusable and it's a crime just to use it as landfill."

The program started in January when the British Columbia Housing Commission gave Housesavers the task of dismantling 15 homes bounded by Foul Bay Road and Marrion, Bee and Goldsmith streets in Oak Bay the site of a proposed senior citizens housing complex.

"We asked the government to call off the bulldozers — not to pay them and let us do it," said Klassen in a Times interview this week in Housesavers' garage office.

For the first three months, the going was slow and somewhat experimental, she said.

"People would slide down a roof and get caught on a pole. Three stepped on nails, one ripped a finger and someone smashed their finger with a brick — but we learned that generally you take a house apart the reverse way the carpenter put it together."

Of the 15 houses — all built between 1910 and 1930 — eight have been taken down, four are in the process of being moved to a lot on Pembroke Street to be duplexed by Housesavers in conjunction with the Springridge Co-Op Housing Association, and three remain to be dismantled.

Housesavers have put a freeze on sales of their recycled building materials until August, by which time it will be known what supplies the Springridge project will need. But up to now, sales have been brisk.

"We sell at half-price or less — like about eight cents a foot for two-by-fours," says Klassen. "One man who came around said the grade of the old lumber is so good, it would be used for export if it were being produced today."

About 75 per cent of all items salvaged are salable, she said, with asphalt shingles and plaster work being the main throwaway items. Most buyers are weekend carpenters.

The clearing site is dotted with neat piles of wood lath, structural timber, pipes, cedar shakes, shelving, steps and bricks.

"Cleaning laths is really picky — and with the bricks you feel like you're on a chain gang," she said. "One little house was a disappointment because it was full of termites and puff beetles and things like that and couldn't be salvaged.

"But on the whole, it's just a matter of what you are willing to put into it — and it's rewarding because you just don't have to work under pressure."

Klassen said the neighbors are happy because the work is done quietly without bulldozers. The Workmen's Compensation Board has inspected the site and they're happy, too.

"The WCB inspector told us we were an incredibly safe operation—and demolition is the third most dangerous job in Canada," she said.

The 11-man, four-woman crew all wear hardhats "because even if you step on a nail and don't have one on you don't get coverage." Even the scarecrow in the garden — cultivated by Housesavers — wears a hardhat.

By the time the grant runs out next January the group hopes to have enough new business to go it alone.

"You don't save much time with a bulldozer," says Klassen. "It takes about two weeks to get one and we can do the average house in about three."

Tots Hit Hardest By Family Crisis

By RICHARD FLASTE

When a family is stricken by crisis, no one's emotional well-being is safe. But the little ones — the four-year-olds, the six-year-olds — are especially vulnerable.

If there has been a suicide in the family, or a bitter divorce, a serious accident, a debilitating illness or an imprisonment, the small children, who are convinced that what they think or feel makes things happen, often believe they caused the problem. Frequently, they are afraid it will happen again, and they feel helpless, unloved, abandoned, confused.

All of that is sometimes compounded when the adults in the family — baffled and hurt, too — can't find the words to help their children. Instead they turn the trouble into something that is literally unspeakable: Hush, they say, for this is too terrible to talk about. Or, perhaps worse, they tell the child that what he knows to be true is in fact not true, that he dreamed it or made it up.

And that, according to Ann Kliman, a psychologist who specializes in families under stress, is a "destructive thing to do."

"When something awful happens," she said the other day, "what the adult doesn't realize is that the child perceives changes in the people around him. No matter how hard they pretend."

Kliman, along with her husband, Dr. Gilbert Kliman, a child psychiatrist, is a director of the Centre for Preventive Psychiatry in White Plains, N.Y., dealing primarily with children who range in age from two to six years old.

Preventive child psychiatry is the art of intervening in a healthy youngster's life as he is going through a potentially damaging situation. That is called primary prevention, and the fact that the centre devotes so much of its considerable energies in this area sets it apart from other mental health facilities.

Secondary prevention involves treating a child who is showing early symptoms — extreme fearfulness, aggressiveness, passivity or regression to earlier behavior during the formative years, before the symptoms harden into a more severe pattern. The centre does this, too, but secondary prevention is, of course, a function that is widely performed by other child clinics as well.

In addition to working with various treatment modes, the centre attempts to educate the community.

With all this effort directed at prevention, what specifically, is the centre trying to head off? Mrs. Kliman sketched some possible results of stress badly handled:

The child might generalize a fear of asking questions about activities outside the family — school, for instance. Or, sure that he caused the accident that injured his brother ("Sit down," his father yelled, just before the crash, "you'll kill us all"), he may become self-punitive, more prone to accidents. He might suffer from somatic problems such as headaches and stomachaches.

As an adult, he might become a chronic hypochondriac. Or feel he's no good and doesn't deserve to be happy, and then, as if to prove it, he'll only relate to people who can't gratify him entering an unfulfilling marriage, followed by children of his own — and a new generation of problems.

It's an admittedly oversimplified summary — similar emotional difficulties might grow out of any number of situations, not just a particular crisis or series of crises. Moreover, many children manage to get through a stressful period unscathed.

But the centre's philosophy is that when some potentially damaging situation has developed, the child and the family ought to be talked to.

Here are some typical crisis situations, along with descriptions of what the centre's approach to them might be:

—Mother commits suicide. The small child may be told that "mommy let a bad accident happen to her" and that she will not be coming back but that the father is still there and he surely will not leave. The child will be encouraged to express, through the use of words, toys and other play, his feelings of loss, fear and anger (adults often react to suicide with an enraged, "How could she do this to me?" Children feel the same way).

Divorce. The simple act of bringing the problem out in the open might help the child understand that he did not cause the break-up. And it should be emphasized that "Mommy and daddy cannot get along because mommy and daddy have a problem — and it is not something that Johnny did or even could do that makes daddy (or, these days, mommy) want to leave home."

Sexual molestation. The parents of, say, a five-year-old girl who has been undressed and fondled by a 16-year-old boy will be told that if they treat this as a "frightening but not-too-significant incident," the chancesd of its causing lasting damage will be lessened. Moreover, they will be told that the real hazard is that the child will grow into an inhibited adult (not that the child will be, as Dr. Kliman put it, "turned on to sex," which is the usual fear of parents). It is necessary to work through the feelings of fright, perhaps even excitement, felt by the child and to explain to her that it is safe to "expect adults to be sexy only with each other, not with children."

Smokers Beware! Public Puffing Faces Challenge

VANCOUVER (CP) Smokers beware! Non-smokers are going to challenge your right to puff in public.

A summer project financed by the British Columbia and Vancouver city health departments will help the non-smoker fight for clean air.

Research officer Ken Newington said it is aimed at encouraging non-smokers to complain about cigarette smoke in public places and at mobilizing pressure to have the right to clean air backed by law.

"The way things stand right now, non-smokers who complain about smoke being blown in their faces are made to feel like cranks or pests," said Newington.

"Non-smokers are a suffering, silent majority. They need to have their consciousness raised so they will appreciate they are in the majority and they have the right and the power to demand relief from a dirty, ugly habit."

Cigarettes are more than just irritating smoke, offensive smell and filthy butts. They can also be a hazard to the health of the non-smoker.

"People may think that because they don't inhale a cigarette that they are spared the danger," Newington said.

"But it's a fact that the slipstream, the smoke that comes directly off the end of the cigarette without being filtered through the tobacco, has a higher proportion of poison than inhaled smoke.

"A study done last year for the city health department found that a non-smoker in a smoky beer parlor will inhale as much benzo-a-pyrine a substance which has been linked to lung cancer in experimental animals — in two hours as if he had smoked 10 unfiltered cigarettes."

Project director Marie Tracy said her staff of four will develop and publicize ways for non-smokers to protest smoking on an individual basis and as a group.

"As an individual, it takes nerve to speak up, but there are ways you can do it," she said.

"If somebody lights up right near you, you can turn to them and say, 'excuse me, I suffer from asthma, and the smoking irritates my lungs — do you mind smoking somewhere else?'"

Tracy, who used to counsel people on how to quit smoking, said the project also will distribute cards which can be given to smokers if the non-smoker is too shy to speak up. The message will be a courteous reminder of the non-smoker's rights.

Grey Panthers Grow

CHICAGO (AP) — Margaret Kuhn was forced to retire four years ago at the age of 65, and she promptly declared war on the Establishment.

"It was an outrage and a shock," said Kuhn, one of the founders of the Grey Panthers, a group fighting "agism" — discrimination against the elderly.

"Six of us got together in New York and said this nonsense has got to stop," she said in an interview this week.

"Within three weeks of our meeting; two of us dropped dead. Massive coronaries. That didn't stop the rest of us, though. Today, we have about 6,000 people on our mailing lists."

Since the meeting, Kuhn has demonstrated and testified in favor of improved banking and public transportation services for the elderly, social security reforms and housing and income maintenance programs.

Alvarez-Welch Medical Report

By DR. WALTER ALVAREZ

Recently, with the many violent rainstorms sweeping across the country, several persons have been killed by lightning. The National Fire Protection Association reminds us that if we are outdoors during a thunderstorm, we should avoid standing under isolated trees or next to a wire fence.

In a storm, people should leave hilltops and open spaces such as golf courses, beaches and fields. Swimmers should immediately leave the water when an electrical storm comes.

The important thing to remember isn't to be the tallest thing around. In my youth I lived for three years in northern Mexico, where a mountain and a big treeless plain met. In the early summer, almost every day there was a thunderstorm with many flashes of lightning.

One day a man on horseback, riding across the flat plain, got struck so powerfully by lightning that his horse was driven down into the ground. As one would expect, both the man and the horse were killed. Apparently they were the highest point for a mile around. He should have gotten off his horse and lain down on the ground.

I have read that people in a closed car during a thunderstorm are safe.

There are other hazards during the summertime. Campers should know that waterproofing materials, such as parafin wax, used on cotton sleeping bags and tents can make them extremely flammable, and sparks from the campfire or a portable stove could cause a terrible fire. Tragedies have occurred when campers were trapped in a burning sleeping bag or tent. Obviously people should be sure they are buying flame retardant camping equipment.

Also they should be sure that they set up the sleeping area well away from the fire, and should never use candles or flaming lamps in tents, only flashlights. Everyone should remember that lightweight summer clothing is also more flammable than thickly woven winter apparel.

People using motorboats should remember never to smoke cigarettes when starting a motor or filling the gas tank with fuel. Smoking should not be permitted unless the motor is turned off, and any oil that is spilled should be wiped up immediately.

People who love to cook their food over an outdoor barbecue should try to use solid fire-starters, because that type is safest. They should never add a liquid "starter" to charcoals that are already burning; this can cause a very dangerous "back flash" which can instantly envelope in flames the arms and face of anyone standing nearby.

According to the National Fire Protection Association president, Charles S. Morgan, "Whether you're boating, camping, caught in an electrical storm, using a power mower, or just charbroiling a steak in your own back yard, pay attention to fire and explosion prevention."

TUBERCULOSIS

Some readers have asked me about tuberculosis (once known as consumption), wondering about the present status of treatment for the disease. At the U.S. Centre for Disease Control, a division of the U.S. Public Health Service, experts have made a study of three groups, each of about 210 hospitalized tuberculosis patients. Each group was treated with a different combination of drugs and then they were evaluated to see which type of treatment was best.

Best was the drug Rifampin. After 12 weeks of treatment with that drug, 90 per cent of the patients with moderately advanced tuberculosis of the lung had lost the disease-carrying germs in their sputum. X-ray examination of the lungs also showed healing.

Actually, years ago, when several drugs were found which could cure tuberculosis, most of the sanitariums had to go out of business for lack of patients.

I rejoice greatly over this report, if only because in 1910 I worked in a large clinic for the poor, where every few days I saw people dying with tuberculosis, people whom I could not help because there was then no good drug treatment for the disease.

Some day we will also have a drug that will cure cancer.

KARATE BLOWS

I read that recently, Drs. H. D. Cantwell and J. T. King, Jr., of Georgia Baptist Hospital in Atlanta, had as a patient a 39-year-old woman who had to be hospitalized because of her abdominal pain, nausea, vomiting, and fainting spells. She was found to be suffering from an injury to her liver which she had gotten during her second karate lesson. She underwent surgery, and spent three weeks in the hospital while she recovered. Fortunately her liver healed.

The karate teacher and his pupil learned the need for at first going easy, and supervising carefully the beginning karate students. As the doctors said "This is not to condemn karate, but rather to call attention to the potential injury to an intra-abdominal organ from a forceful blow."

'Innocent Old Lady' Really a Detective

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — White-haired and 64, Florence Sperbeck tries hard to "look like an innocent old lady." She should. She's a private investigator.

"It's a marvelous career field for women, and age is no barrier," said Sperbeck, who investigates cases ranging from shoplifting to runaway juveniles.

"I believe, with many others, a woman is more disarming. People open the door and invite me in. They would never do that for a man."

She has a closet filled with wigs and change-of-personality costumes, a background in acting and professional police work, a quick wit and a fast tongue — all tools of the trade.

Sperbeck began her investigative career with Oakland police department in 1942. She said in an interview that her superiors disliked replacing drafted police officers with women.

"The captain called me in and told me, "Women don't belong on the police force. The only reason I hired you was because the war's on and we need the men out on the street. As soon as it's over, we are going to get rid of you," she said.

In 1947, Sperbeck joined the police department in nearby Alameda. Later, she transferred to the Contra Costa County sheriff's department. Bad health forced her retirement in 1964.

She later recovered and began doing investigative work for her husband, Ivan Sperbeck, an Oakland criminal lawyer. They have a son, 44.

Investigations in personal injury allegations, security analysis for stores and businesses, and finding runaway juveniles account for the bulk of her work.

"I like the idea of showing there is a place for women in both police work and investigative work," said Sperbeck, who graduated at the top of a special FBI training school class she took before her 1964 retirement. "We still have to go out and prove we can do it."

The 4-page folder "Fast 'n Fancy" features dozens of suggestions for the use of canned puddings and fruits for quick-as-a-wink desserts.

Frozen of home-baked pastry shells may be filled with any canned pudding, or canned pudding plus fruit. Then garnish each tart with either whipped cream, chopped nuts, maraschino cherries, crushed peppermint candy or whatever else you imagination suggests.

These readymade puddings are also excellent when served as parfaits. To create a parfait, arrange attractive layers alternating pudding and fruit, interspersed with layers of jam, sherbet or crushed cookies. You could also experiment and flavour one of the puddings with sherry, rum, maple syrup or coffee. Serve your parfaits well chilled!

The folder also tells you how to make delicious pudding shakes. Kids love them.

Canned puddings make quick and easy fillings for cakes and tortes, for cream puffs or meringue shells as well as for trifles, napoleons or cookie squares.

U.S. Makes Bike Code

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Consumer Product Safety Commission has wheeled out the United States' first bicycle safety standards, to take effect Jan. 1.

The mandatory regulations, covering everything from braking performance to reflectors, are aimed at reducing the estimated one million bicycle-related injuries last year.

The commission estimates that 419,000 persons, mostly children, were injured severely enough last year to seek treatment in hospital emergency rooms — making bikes the most hazardous of the tens of thousands of products the new commission polices.

Bicycles manufactured and distributed before the deadline may continue to be sold.

Frames, steering systems, wheels and brakes will have to meet tests for safety, performance and strength.

Don't Show Contempt

DEAR ABBY: My 16-year-old granddaughter is pregnant. The boy is a high school kid with no way of supporting himself, let alone a wife and child, so marriage is out of the question. His folks have thrown him out, and a neighbor has taken him in.

My son and daughter-in-law are going to see their daughter through this, and they're keeping the baby.

My problem: How should a 75-year-old grandmother act? Should I act like nothing out of the ordinary has happened, and accept the baby as a legitimate great-grandchild? Or should I show my contempt and disgust and turn away? I guess I was born 75 years too soon because I don't seem able to accept this situation.

So far I've managed to keep my mouth shut, but I'll have to take a stand soon. I've always had a good relationship with my son and his wife and don't want to spoil it now.

Please help me set my thinking straight. —Grandma

DEAR GRANDMA: If your family ever needed your compassion and understanding, it's now! You can accept the new baby without condoning the unfortunate circumstances. The last thing your granddaughter needs now is a show of "contempt and disgust." (she's suffered enough.)

DEAR ABBY: I am a 33-year-old happily married woman. I used to have a beautiful figure. (In high school I was 38-25-36.) After nursing three babies, I lost my bust. Now I have to wear a padded bra to look presentable. Nobody except my husband and a few very close friends know what I'm really like.

I wanted so much to be firm and filled out again that I made an appointment with a plastic surgeon. He explaied all about silicone implants, and I can hardly wait to have it done, but something is holding me back.

Would such an operation be considered deceitful, and therefore sinful in the eyes of the Lord? — Holding Off.

DEAR HOLDING: Your clergyman can tell you what the ruling in your church is concerning reconstructive plastic surgery, so ask him to "fill you in" before you ask the doctor to "fill you out!"

DEAR ABBY: I'll bet you've never run into a problem like mine: I am being married in a formal church wedding. My fiance and I have known each other for two years, and the only name I've ever known him by is "Beaver." His parents have called him "Beaver" ever since they brought him home from the hospital, and everyone has called him "Beaver" ever since.

His real name is Steven, but hardly anyone knows it. When we say our marriage vows, it will seem so unnatural for me to say: "I, Mona, take thee, Steven," because I've never in all my life called him Steven. But I'm afraid it would sound funny if I were to say: "I, Mona, take thee, Beaver!" so, what do you advise?—Mona

DEAR MONA: Say: "I, Mona, take thee, Steven." Nicknames are a no-no in a traditional marriage ceremony.

THE ABORTION SLAUGHTER

What Will Happen After July 8?

Expert opinion agrees that human life begins at conception. From the first tiny cluster of cells we require only protection, time, and nurture to become unique persons, yet thousands of unborn Canadian citizens are put to death each week in your hospitals and clinics, without effective legal protection. In the last house, a majority dominated by Progressive Conservative and Social Credit members of parliament defeated a N.D.P. proposal to relax our already weak abortion laws, but strong forces are again at work to deprive the unborn of all human rights. We urge your consideration of this important issue on Monday. Please support your pro-life candidate and let him/her know of your concern.

Wieners Vanish From Counters At the Weekend

By MARY MOORE

Inflation is forcing us, willy nilly, into using our imagination in our cooking. Since most of us cannot afford expensive meats we have to improvise and flavour and extend and enhance what we can afford.

At 5 p.m. on Saturday afternoon the wiener section in the meat counter was nearly empty in one supermarket I visited. I wondered if thousands of Canadians would be eating hot dogs on Sunday.

To help preserve your pride we have an idea for turning ordinary wieners into a glamourous Sunday supper indoors or outdoors. This will serve 5 or 6 people.

WAIKIKI WIENERS

¼ c. prepared mustard
¼ c. orange marmalade
10 or 12 wieners (about 1 lb.)
1 can (19 oz.) pineapple chunks, drained
10 or 12 slices bacon

Combine mustard and marmalade. Cut wieners lengthwise to within ⅛ inch of other side. Spread cut surfaces with mustard-marmalade mixture. Tuck 4 to 5 pineapple chunks in each wieners. If desired cut the chunks in half. Wrap each stuffed wiener with bacon, fastening ends with wooden toothpicks. Brush generously with marmalade mixture. Grill or broil on rack on broiler pan until bacon is crisp, turning to cook bacon on all sides.

We had a complaint. A husky young footballer had been invited and he expected hot dogs. Fortunately I had baked a hugh round loaf of French bread and put it on the picnic table on a board with a serated knife beside. When I handed him his naked Waikiki Wiener he went over to that loaf of bread, cut a one-inch slice and folded it around his wiener. Unabashedly he opened his mouth as wide as possible and took a great luscious bite. That brought the other boys to the table to slice bread and copy him.

It was great fun watching those hearty eaters. It is a meal for any day of the week but seems particularly appropriate for Saturday or Sunday evenings out of doors.

TACKLE inflation positively, says Mary Moore, who has dressed up ordinary wieners to look and taste like a holiday meal from Hawaii. French bread can replace traditional hot dog bun, if the change is too much for some.

Metis Thrive on Lunch

EDMONTON (CP) — Metis children in Northern Alberta communities seem to be healthier since a school lunch program to combat poor nutrition was started last fall, says Rick Mace of the provincial Metis Development Branch.

Though there is no official assessment of the program, some teachers have reported more attention and alertness from students and an increased class attendance, he said in a prepared release.

The free lunch — usually soup, sandwiches, milk and dessert — often provides up to half of the nutritional needs of children in communities like Sputivow, Conlkin, Cadotte Lake and Little Buffalo, Mace said.

The provincial government has set aside $275,000 for the next school term to extend the program to other isolated towns.

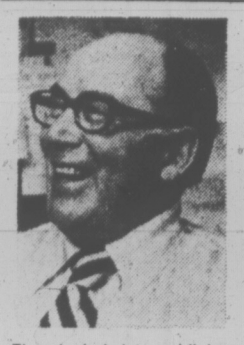
ABOUT YOUR GLASSES

by Ralph Drew, Consultant to the Canadian Guild of Dispensing Opticians



Those Lenses that Change Color

Scientists who developed it call it photochromic glass. It works like a camera film: sunlight makes it darken. But unlike your film, the glass lightens when you take it indoors, then darkens again in the sun, and so on. We call this — glass that "turns on and off", compared to the ordinary kind, with "fixed tints".

These lenses have become so popular that at least one of every five people wearing glasses owns a pair. If you are one of the other four, you might find these facts interesting:

- Until recently two kinds have been available: Varigray, and Photosun. Varigray changes from almost clear to medium gray, and opticians call it a "comfort" lens. Photosun changes from medium to dark gray; it is a sunglass, and a truly remarkable one. A new kind — Varibrown — has just appeared. Its darkened, tan color is very pleasant, and the faint golden tint indoors is most attractive.
- They don't darken and lighten abruptly, but gradually, which is better for the eyes. But their magic goes even further: they know when to darken, and how much! In most automobiles they change very little because ultra-violet radiation, which is what activates them, is mostly trapped by the glass windows.
- They can be made plain (no power) or prescription, even bi-focals. And like any ordinary lenses they can be tempered for safety.
- In a way they behave like new shoes — the more you wear them the better they work. But unlike shoes, they never wear out. Indeed, the tint changing action actually improves with age.

Your dispensing optician has special equipment to demonstrate how these lenses do your thinking for you. Now he's a careful, conservative man, and if he seems enthusiastic, don't blame him. He rarely has a chance to do tricks with lenses.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Fanaticism Isn't Sincerity

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

If you have any insight into the workings of human nature you will know that it is not always what a person says he or she believes that he or she really believes, not always what the most noise is made about that is really cared most about.

When someone is especially positive and assertive about something we are often led to suspect that he or she is trying to cover-up for something else — and our suspicions are not always unwarranted.

Fanaticism is not necessarily a guarantee of sincerity. Carl Jung, the great Swiss psychiatrist, once pointed out that "fanaticism exists chiefly in individuals who are compensating for secret doubts." As the philosopher, George Santayan, put it, "A fanatic is one who, having lost sight of his aims, redoubles his effort."

Then, there are some things we take so for granted that we are rarely impelled to be talkative about them. In every person's pattern of belief, in every person's faith, there is an unspoken part, a part which to that person is so obvious and so real that he or she rarely feels any need to mention it.

Each of us must be very careful, very hesitant, very humble, when trying to assess the sincerity and the strength of anyone's faith — one's own faith or the faith of another person. Perhaps in religious circles we have so overemphasized the significance of certain forms of public expression of faith that we have knocked the whole matter quite out of focus.

In the Bible the notion of faith has several shades of meaning, but in all of them there is an element of basic conviction and trust and commitment by which a person tries to live. Faith is not simply a matter of giving assent with the mind to a set of religious propositions. Nor is it merely in the following of a certain scheme of church teachings and practices. Nor a matter of having intensely emotional experiences. Faith, rather, is a matter of conviction and trust and commitment issuing in action.

But faith is a tricky thing. It is possible to say all the correct and proper things about one's religion, to be glib and wordy about spiritual matters, to be able to articulate the doctrines and dogmas, and yet not have the kind of faith that inspires justice and mercy and compassion, the kind of faith which will sustain you when you get caught in life's storms.

On the other hand, there are some people who are unable to make an articulate expression of faith, people hard-pressed to explain with any precision just what they do believe, but who in daily life show the love and the creative graciousness by which Jesus said his true disciples can be recognized.

Leonard Hodgson, an Oxford theologian, expressed a fundamental of religion in this way: "The text of the genuineness of a man's belief lies in his readiness to act upon it."

Ancestry? It May Be All the Same

By PATRICK DOYLE

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada populated by Vikings? Not really but the majority of Canadians probably could trace their origins to the days of the Normans, who were originally Norse Vikings, says J. Y. Rowe of Ottawa.

A lifelong student of genealogy, he is one of two Canadian members of the British-based Harleian Society, specializing in genealogical traces.

Mr. Rowe, also a member of the Devon and Cornwall Record Society, feels that a sound knowledge of genealogy would help ease conflicts based on supposed racial origins.

To refer to the French and English as Canada's two founding races is "nonsense," he said in an interview.

The surname Levesque, for instance, which most Canadians associate with French ancestry, has a Norman origin, he said. The name could be traced back to Roger de L'Eveque, Archbishop of York (1154-1191). As the name indicates, this Norman archbishop came from Pont-L'Eveque in Normandy, about 10 miles southeast of Trouville.

The problem, said Mr. Rowe, "is that we have all had over 40 billion ancestors in the past 1,000 years and a lot of people do not even know the name of their grandmother."

Most would associate the surname Courtenay, also spelled Courtney, with British ancestry.

"Not so," said Mr. Rowe. "That name has a French origin."

It came from Courtnay which literally meant a "short nose of land" and was situated south on Paris.

It troubles Mr. Rowe when reference is made to the French-English conflict in Canada. Most Canadians, in his opinion, are English or French only because they have not bothered to trace their ancestry beyond their parents.

The same misunderstanding is present in the Irish conflict, he said, referring to a news story from Belfast. The story cited Rev. John Glynn, a Roman Catholic priest, as non-apologetic about his distaste for British people in general and British soldiers in particular.

It was an ironic statement, said Mr. Rowe, since the surname Glynn is a Cornish-Welsh one and you "can't get anyone more British than that."

MADE OTHER FINDS

The first known mention of a Glynn was in 1198, when Richard de Glynn was fined four marks for a breach of forest laws during the reign of Richard I. Father Glynn's dislike for the British, Mr. Rowe said, amounted to one Briton disliking another.

Tracing origins of the name Fitzgerald, which he says is Norman-Welsh and not Irish, Mr. Rowe made another genealogical find. This involved the two IRA sisters, Marion and Delours Price, recently moved from an English to an Irish prison after a hunger strike.

The sisters are of Welsh origin, not Irish, he said. His research shows that Walter Fitz Otho, son of Otho, the Constable of Windsor Castle, married Gladys, the daughter of Rees, about the year 1100. Rees was the son of Tudor Maur, prince of Wales.

However, in genealogical sketches, the phrase "son of" becomes AP, so that "son of Rees" becomes AP Rees, Mr. Rowe said. With the passage of time, "son of Rees" became A. Price. Hence the surname of two non-Irish IRA girls, said Mr. Rowe.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL TURNS CHARISMATIC

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (NYT) — For a Roman Catholic parochial school, the scene was unusual: children in jeans and T-shirts singing and clapping, some shaking tambourines on the auditorium stage, led by a cheerful nun in slacks.

"Do you love Jesus?" sang Sister Mary Mahoney, and the children responded, "Yes, we love Jesus."

In a traditional Catholic school, the pupils wear uniforms and begin the day in their homerooms with brief rote prayer. But this was St. Patrick's Word of God School — the first and, so far, only Catholic school in the U.S., it is believed, that is also charismatic or Pentecostal.

The terms describe a form of devotion that emphasizes feelings and spontaneity, in contrast with stylization and ritual. The Holy Spirit is said to be manifested in the lives of individuals through certain "gifts," such as healing and glossolalia, in which a worshipper utters syllables that sound like parts of some foreign language.

The terms derive from Pentecost Sunday, when, the New Testament relates, the apostles were all "filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak in other tongues."

Until recent years Pentecostalism was practised in various forms only in certain Protestant churches. The movement began to take hold among Catholics a year or so after the Second Vatican Council 1962-65, which called for reform of traditional liturgy.

"It started with intellectuals who were studying scripture and who started praying that the Holy Spirit might move them in a more powerful way," recalls Sister Patricia Considine one of St. Patrick's three principals. She prefers the term "charismatic" because some people associate Pentecostalism with nonintellectual, over-emotional piety.

Although it is still a small movement in the church—affecting some 200,000 of the 48 million Catholics in the United States — it continues to grow rapidly. "There are charismatic prayer communities throughout the country," reports the Most Rev. Louis E. Gelineau, Bishop of Providence, who authorized the start of the Word of God elementary school. "Every diocese has felt its effect."

Thus, additional Catholic charismatic schools are likely to form over the next few years. Bishop Gelineau says, especially if St. Patrick's experimental program is successful.

The school began in September, 1972, at the site of a parochial school that had shut down for want of finances — a plight shared by various other parochial schools across the country. The World of God school, with its surrounding community, appears to be a revitalizing force in the run-down parish, which continues to offer mass and other Catholic services as well.

Some of the 183 pupils commute from as far as 30 miles, in mini-buses provided by parents. But most life in the Smith Hill area of the school, a former Irish, now mixed neighborhood.

In many cases, their families have moved in from well-to-do suburban homes, not only because of the school but also because the parents wished to be part of the community. Parents not already involved in the movement take eight-week seminars in Catholic Pentecostalism before they can enroll their children.

"The focus is the Christian education of the total family, not just the children," explains Sister Patricia. "If what the children learn in school is not reinforced in the home, it just won't stay with them. Parents are the first educators of their children."

About 200 of the more than 700 members of the Word of God prayer commuunity now live in the area, encompassing four square miles, and a village atmosphere prevails.

Most of the school's 14 full-time teachers, work without pay. The classes, from kindergarten to eighth year, are ungraded, and children are encouraged to advance in most subjects at their own pace. Drama and art are stressed as means of expression.

The charismatic emphasis on "opening one's life to the action of the Spirit" and on a personal relationship with God influences academic as well as religious subject. In a science class, for example, a youngster learning about the embryo is urged to "praise God for the uniqueness of each individual."

PM ENLARGING BUREAUCRACY?

GRAVELBOURG, Sask. (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau has created a new federal department . . . but he didn't mean to.

Speaking Thursday in Gravelbourg to more than 2,000 persons, he stressed the need for a national effort to ensure economic stability and said that for this reason the Liberal Government created the department of regional economic "disparity."

He paused, but did not correct his faux pas.

The proper name is department of regional economic expansion.

N.S. Schools Bar Solzhenitsyn Novel

HALIFAX (CP) — The Nova Scotia department of education has decided to remove a book by Russian author Alexander Solzhenitsyn from the list of books available for reading by high school students from the provincial book bureau.

Education Minister William Gillis says his department reached the decision after some parents complained about the kind of language contained in the English translation of One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich.

Mr. Gillis said, however, there were not "a large number of complaints" and those filed were mainly from a handful of parents and a couple of community organizations.

The minister agreed that students should be mature enough to decide on their reading material but "parents want to have some input as to what their children read."

While no new copies of the book will be circulated to school libraries, those that have the book can continue to use them in the library.

Mr. Gillis said also that the decision does not mean that the book could be put back on the list again in another year.

Solzhenitsyn's book about Ivan Denisovich is considered by many authorities to be a classic in depicting the harsh treatment and brutal punishment that was life in Soviet prison camps.

Vegetable-Sowing Deadline Nears

GARDENING
jack beastall

Excerpts from my garden notebook:

Aug. 15, 1950. Sowed complete fall vegetable garden as test. Early dwarf peas, green and yellow bush beens, early short carrots, Laurentian turnips, lettuce, radish, spring onions, beets, spinach.

Oct. 6, 1950. Fall veg. garden reasonable success. Peas and beans killed by frost third week September—just reaching full production. Lettuce, radish, spring onions good, all harvested. Beets used while small, some loss to frost. Spinach, carrots, turnips still being harvested. Next year try Aug. 1 sowing.

Aug. 1, 1951. Sowed fall vegetable garden, same crops as last year.

Oct. 3, 1951. Good results. Same crops lost to late September frost, but much more produce gathered before damage. H. W. suggests, mid-July as latest sowing date to avoid frost damage to tender vegetables.

1952 to date. Sowing of fall vegetable garden in mid-July each year, with only one loss of peas and beans to frost in early September.

This mid-summer sowing of vegetables for use from September to November is not practical for the gardener who fills the entire vegetable area in May. He is now faced with rows of mature carrots with worm-eaten and splitting roots, beets going woody, summer turnips too hard and hot to eat, beans and cabbage far in excess of family needs. But it is practical for the gardener who makes succession sowings.

Although sucession sowing has been regularly practised in many countries by generations of gardeners, it is not widely followed in Canada, probably because most of the available information on gardening is a scaled-down version of farming.

A hundred years ago it was necessary for most Canadians to produce as much food as possible during a short growing season and store it for use over a long, cold non-productive period.

No early settler could have foreseen the changes that have taken place in that hundred years. None dreamed of food supplies coming from semi-tropical areas of another nation, making spring and summer vegetables available in the depth of winter, and obviating the need for elaborate root cellars.

The home garden today has a different purpose. At present it is a hobby rather than a necessity, although long-range projections indicate the reverse may be true in a decade or so.

The hobby angle satisfies our natural affiliation with the soil on which our existence depends. It also provides us with certain foods we enjoy or use extensively, and with flavors not found in the same crops when shipped thousands of miles, displayed under bright lights, water-soaked or ice-packed to maintain some measure of eye appeal.

To serve its purpose, the home garden has to be planned to provide a small quantity of several different vegetables each week suited to the requirements of the dependant family.

This means sowing small quantities of seed at frequent intervals, every 10 days in spring to every 20 to 30 days as growth speeds up and germination time is reduced. In other words, making succession sowings as required.

The purpose of the tests in 1950 was to eliminate, if possible, the one unknown factor, the latest date at which succession sowings could be made with a reasonable chance of having no losses to frost. That date proves to be July 15 for this area.

Knowing this date makes it possible for owners of new homes, or those who have recently purchased a piece of property, to have a vegetable garden this year, as well as helping gardeners who missed the spring sowing because of absence or sickness.

Another group which can benefit are recipients of fresh vegetables from a neighbor or friend who now feel that a few home grown vegetables would be a good addition to the family diet and an extender to the food budget.

Between July 15 and September 30 we have approximately 75 days which we can reasonably expect to be good growing weather, so we refer to the seed catalogue and make a list of vegetables varieties that will mature in 75 days or less from the sowing of seed.

Some idea of what we shall find is shown in the list at the start of this article. We soon discover that most of the varieties normally sown outdoors in spring will fit our time limit, so we can use the seed left-over from the spring sowings.

Since the weather from mid-July to the end of September is almost spring in reverse seed being sown now in warm soil and the crop maturing as temperatures decrease, we have some pleasant surprises ahead.

Germination takes days instead of weeks, growth is rapid and steady due to mild night temperatures, and maturing is slowed down so that we have a longer period for gathering produce in its prime.

We also discover that 25 to 28-day crops such as radish can be sown up to mid-August, and succession sowings of lettuce until the end of August some of the last seedlings being transplanted to a cold frame for use until Christmas.

In addition to the previous mid-July sowing list we now have winter radish and three kinds of spinach which are hardy to frost. These go with the parsnips, leeks, late fall and winter cabbage to add variety to meals well into February.

Whether you sow a fall vegetable garden or not, mid-July is the recognized date here for sowing the purple-top Laurentian turnip for use when the size of tennis balls in September and the balance for storage.

Flower-of-Spring cabbage seed is also sown in the latter part of July and the young plants set out in Early September. These provide loose-leaf cabbage for use in late March through April, and head cabbage in May, after which they bolt rapidly to seed.

When the weather is hot (80 to 90-degree range) in mid-July we experience difficulty in keeping the surface soil moist enough for quick germination.

The common practice under such conditions is to sow in shallow drills and cover the rows with boards for a few days. The only problem is that earwigs and slugs congregate under the boards and devour the seedlings as they appear.

It is better to use pieces f shiplap on edge along the south side of the rows, leaning against wooden pegs driven on the north side. This gives a 45-degree roof over the seed row without making a cosy cool spot for insects to hold a banquet.

WORK FOR WEEK

As flowering ceases is the best time for lifting and dividing the bearded, or German, irises. They need this when fewer blooming stems are produced, or the roots appear crowded. They must be well rooted again before the fall rains begin or the rhizomes will rot.

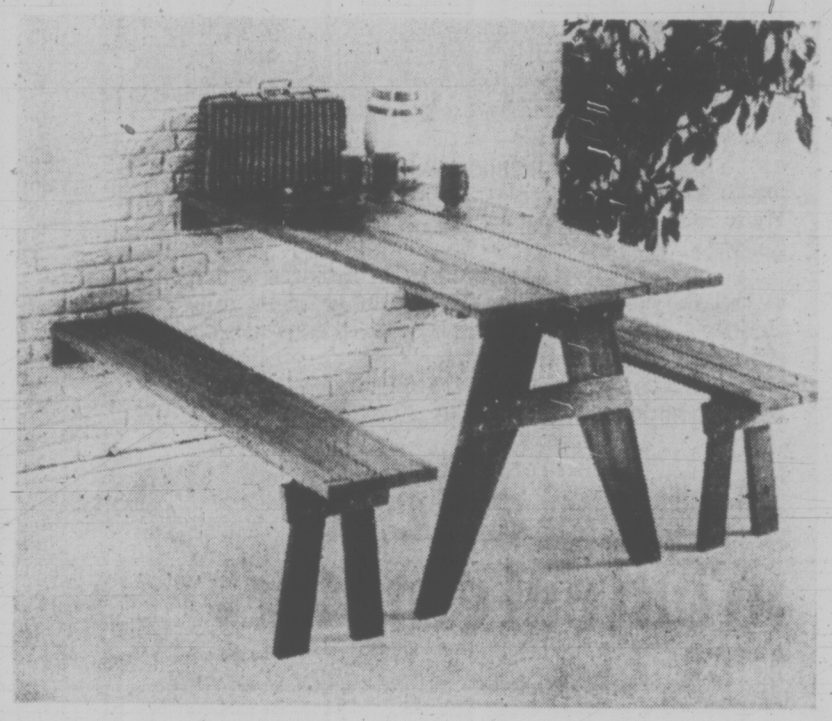
Doronicum (the yellow spring daisy) and pyrethrum (the painted-daisy or early summer) are also best propagated by division at this time.

Put a lime wash on the glass of greenhouse to lessen heat penetration and burning of foliage on potted plants. Ventilate freely, leaving ventilators open at night even though you close the door. Bench, floor and surface soil should normally be dry before dark as temperatures fall.

Reduce stems on fall asters (Michaelmas — daisies), heleniums, artemisa, and the solidagos (Goldenrod) to make good plants by September flowering. Three to five stems are enough for average plant. Water well; mulch surface after watering to prevent baking dry.

See that soil is removed from onion bulbs to help maturing during July. If sufficient water is in subsoil, no more should be given. Garlic and shallots should also be encouraged to finish growing to size and commence ripening this month.

Squash and cucumber flowers are late forming this year. On clear, sunny days, try erecting gauze or bamboo shade a foot or more above the plants on stakes. Fold up on cloudy days. Usually normal set of fruits is apparent by mid August as days are shortened.



THIS PICNICKER fits in everywhere: in a carport, against the side of the house, or on a small patio. Make it from cedar and accent it with weather-resistant brass screws and hinges. Legless sides hinge to plates bolted onto your wall. Table and benches fold against the wall when not in use; fixed wall fasteners hold them up. Legs fold flat. To order the fold-up table and bench pattern No. 259, send $2 (cheque or money order) to: DECO-PLANS, The Victoria Times, P.O. Box 90, Boucherville, Quebec.

OTTAWA (CP) — A 10-member delegation from China begins Sunday a 14-day visit to Canada to study laser research and application.

The science and technology department said in a release today the group will visit Ottawa, Toronto, Edmonton, Quebec City, Montreal and Varennes, Que.

Government, university and industrial laboratories working with laser research and application are on the agenda for the Chinese researchers.

The trip is one of a series of exchanges arranged during the visit to China last fall of a Canadian science delegation, led by Science Minister Jeanne Sauve.

Voters Get Promises, Promises

By STEPHEN SCOTT

OTTAWA (CP) — A promise made, is a debt unpaid, said Robert Service.

If those words from Service's Cremation of Sam McGee are true, the political parties have acquired a fair indebtedness to Canadians.

With the July 8 federal election campaign almost ended, voters must look at the promises, among other things, and decide who they want to govern the country — who must pay off the debts.

The voters have a fair scope of things to consider: Old age pensions, housing, transportation, reduced taxes, goodies for local areas and attacks on the cost of living.

Many of these are not new.

Prime Minister Trudeau, whose government was the first to be defeated in the Commons on a budget, has pledged that a re-elected Liberal government would return to the Commons with that budget. In a sense then, the budget and the whole Liberal program of the last Parliament is an election promise.

Trudeau said at the outset of the campaign that the Liberals would make no election promises, only amplifications and explanations of that program.

But Stanfield has said the Trudeau campaign promises would cost about $2.5 billion, and has called this irresponsible at a time of acute inflation.

Inflation has been the centre of the Stanfield campaign, and his answer to it is a more-than-year-old promise of price and incomes freeze followed by controls.

This has been the most controversial promise of the election campaign, although it had been debated inside and outside the Commons previously.

So had some of the pledges of New Democratic Party Leader David Lewis.

Some of the NDP promises were on the shopping list Lewis gave as the price for continued support of the minority government in April and May. Included in the list were revised corporate tax laws and six-per-cent interest on home mortgages.

There have been no new Social Credit promises.

Here are highlights of promises by parties:

LIBERALS

The budget promised higher taxes for extra-active industries, removal of provincial royalties as income tax deduction; 10 per cent surcharge on some industries; an end to the sales tax of clothing and shoes; $50 cut in tax for low-income taxpayers and other measures.

More for Poor, Elderly

Policies announced or expanded upon during the campaign included housing, transport, old age pensions, consumer protection and income support for farmers and fishermen. Then there were the regional promises such as $10 to $15 million Air Canada maintenance terminal for Winnipeg, home of Defence Minister James Richardson.

Their four-part housing proposal basically seeks to bring home ownership to the middle and low-income brackets through low down payments, subsidization, grants and a bit of pressure on private business.

The budget contained an income tax saving for those who saved for down payments.

The transportation policies touched everything from equalization of freight rates to improvement of services and federal assistance for intercity transportation and urban transit. Canadian National Railways and CP Rail would turn their passenger services over to a federal agency.

Farmers assisted toward greater income in stabilization through changes in such acts as the Agriculture Stabilization Act would see goods go to market with the help of a fleet of government-owned freight cars.

Also based on a means test, spouses of old age pensioners would collect the pension if they were 60 years or over.

CONSERVATIVES

Almost every promise made by Stanfield was related in some way to inflation fighting and to his party's pledge of a 90-day freeze of prices and incomes followed by 18 months or so of flexible controls.

The Conservatives hammered at inflation throughout the campaign and made few outright, clear promises.

As for goodies, Stanfield hinted at support for some local projects by a Conservative government — but he never made a flat promise.

Details of prices and incomes controls never were nailed down — Stanfield said discussions with interested parties, from labor to provinces, must be held first.

But along with these measures there would be an attack on government spending, including a tightening of the public service belt.

Stanfield said income and price controls would help in many areas of the economy, such as housing. But there would be other help in the form of income tax deductions for portion of excessively high home mortgage interest rates.

The 11-per-cent sales tax on building materials would be progressively reduced, and the Conservatives went along with the Liberals in promising to end the sales tax on clothing.

Old age pensions would go to spouses 50 years and older and neediest pensioners would receive substantial increases so that their pension income would total up to $202 a month.

Like the Liberals, Conservatives would give an income tax break to the low-income groups.

More From Big Industry

NEW DEMOCRATS

Lewis continued to call for revised corporate taxation and an end to what he calls corporate tax ripoffs.

While the NDP wanted no part of wage controls, it advocated selective price controls and a board with power to roll back prices and to demand justification of price increases.

The party has called for a two-price system—such as there is for oil—for many commodities and foods, plus subsidization of some basic foods such as industrial milk.

The NDP has urged a $200 basic old age pension payable at age 60 and has advocated a new tax credit system designed to help low-income groups.

It wants six-per-cent interest on home mortgages and a landbanking scheme.

SOCIAL CREDIT

This party has reiterated its calls for $200-a-month old age pensions at age 60.

Party leader Real Caouette rejected the Conservative and NDP anti-inflation ideas and proposed a 25-per-cent discount on all goods at the retail level.

This would be financed with subsidies to merchants provided through credits from the Bank of Canada. That bank also would provide long-term, interest-free loans to the provinces.

Under the Social Credit guaranteed-income scheme, the first $5,000 in yearly income for a married couple and the first $3,000 for a single person would be tax exempt. Every person over 18 would receive $1,500 yearly, whether they work or not. Senior citizens would receive an additional $1,500.

Finding out you've been cheated is bad. Finding out it's legal is even worse.

Most deals are good deals but too often unsuspecting consumers have been taken for a ride by unscrupulous businesses. What seemed like a fair deal turned out to be a raw deal and to make matters worse it was legal. Now all that's changed because of the Trade Practices Act — the first of its kind in Canada. It's designed to stop 'sharp' practices and in doing this it also helps honest businesses who've had to put up with unfair competitors for too long.

Now the law can help you stand up for your rights.

The Trade Practices Act is now law in British Columbia and will be administered by the Department of Consumer Services.

Its aims are quite simple: to stop misleading and deceptive practices quickly and to help consumers recover their losses if someone has taken advantage of them.

By familiarizing yourself with the Act you'll become an informed consumer making it far more difficult for you to be the victim of an illegal practice. And if you should become the victim, the Act will help open the doors to the court so you can stand up for your rights.

Consumer transactions defined.

Doing business in the marketplace of the 70's is often more than just the straight sale of merchandise. So the Trade Practices Act also defines the leasing of goods, the supplying of services and the granting of credit, as consumer transactions. This definition applies where you've entered the deal after July 5, 1974. Only dealings governed by real estate, insurance and securities legislation are exempt.

Types of illegal business practices.

Two basic types of practices are prohibited by the Act: deceptive and unconscionable.

Deceptive practices include everything from a dishonest sales pitch to misleading advertising and phone solicitations or exaggerated repair estimates. In other words if it's misleading, or has the tendency to mislead — it's deceptive.

Let's say you were told your new car will get "30 miles to the gallon" when in fact you'll probably have difficulty in getting 20 miles to the gallon — that's deceptive.

Another example is T.V. repairs. You're told you need a new $75 picture tube when all your set needs is some minor adjustments.

If the court agrees that you've been misled, then you have a right to recover any loss or damages suffered and the deceptive practice will also be stopped — for good.

An unconscionable practice is one that involves high pressure tactics and slippery, tricky deals. You've been conned, the business in question knows it and the court won't enforce the "bargain". Or to put it more politely, if the agreement is so highly unreasonable as to be unfair, or the circumstances surrounding the transaction are overly harsh, the court may declare the entire transaction to be unconscionable. If so, the supplier cannot enforce the contract but you may sue him if you have suffered any loss.

An example might be an elderly consumer who has literally been badgered into a long-term contract. Another possible situation may be, where you are led to believe you are renting a colour T.V., but in fact you are committed to buy the set from the start.

These are only a few examples of the type of selling tactics and other misleading practices that are the target of the Trade Practices Act. To help you the Act lists examples covering a broad range of deceptive acts or unfair schemes.

Who's in charge?

A Director of Trade Practices will be appointed to handle consumer complaints and investigate possible wrong-doings by suppliers.

The director will have a number of options available in order to settle a dispute.

First of all, an attempt will be made to discuss the matter with both sides and amicably resolve the matter. We're confident the great majority of cases can be handled this way.

If it appears the law has been broken, the director can ask the supplier to sign an agreement promising to abide by the Act and, for example, give the consumer back any money lost in the transaction.

If the supplier refuses, the director can ask the courts to settle the matter quickly and fairly.

Putting an end to "caveat emptor".

"Let the buyer beware" is a saying that's thousands of years old and the Department of Consumer Services will do everything possible to help you become aware of deceptive and unconscionable practices so that you will know when someone is trying to take advantage of you.

Service Centres will be opened at several locations in the province to receive and act on complaints. The centres will be staffed by counsellors, researchers, investigators, specialists when necessary and volunteers — all ready to help you. They'll be located in areas where you shop, close to public transportation and equipped with library/resource facilities.

Get in on the act.

One of the most important aspects of the Act is that it makes it easy to help yourself.

The Act catalogues traps for the unwary, loopholes and common abuses to watch for and what you can do about them . . . and there is a lot you can do. You can pursue a complaint on your own, and if necessary, go to court on it. You can ask the judge to stop the illegal practice and to help other consumers in addition to yourself who may have lost money due to the same sharp practice.

So learn all you can about the Act and don't forget to use the valuable services of organizations like the Consumers' Association of Canada, Better Business Bureaus, the newspaper help columns as well as the Department of Consumer Services.

Now responsible consumers and honest businesses can stand up for their rights. With the help of the Trade Practices Act you've got what it takes to get yourself a fair deal.

If you're interested in learning more about the Act just write to the Department of Consumer Services in Victoria, B.C. Be sure to specify whether you're a consumer or business so you'll get the pamphlet that concerns you most.

Wonderful World of Animals

DEAR DR. MILLER: A group of us girls all go to the same veterinarian with our dogs. Altogether, he's done a lot of operations on our animals and one thing we all wonder about is why does he send our animals home from an operation without bandaging the stomach? They heal up all right, but it seems strange that he doesn't protect the operation more by bandaging them. — D.N.

DEAR D. N.: Since those incisions are apparently healing without problems, the surgeon must be doing something right. Depending upon the type of abdominal surgery involved and the suture materials used, many such incisions will heal more quickly when there is no bandage pressure and air is allowed to circulate freely. Also, a bandage tends to draw the animal's attention to the area and may actually cause them to fuss more with the incision than they would without any covering. Surprisingly perhaps (and for the above reasons), an unbandaged incision is often less likely to become infected than one that is "protected" by a bandage.

Dear Dr. Miller: Lately our cat has the habit of drinking lage amounts of water. This is all right with us except that sometimes if vomits it. Could it hold down warm water better? Or shouldn't we give it much water? — D. D.

Dear D. D.: Cool water is retained better by the stomach of the cat (or the dog) than is eithr very cold or lukewarm water. Because it is unusual for a normal cat to drink enoughwater to cause vomiting, yours should certainly be checked.

Generally, when a large quantity of water is vomited it is reasonable to give smaller quanties but more frequently. It is generally inadvisable to restrict the toal quantity of water consumed except under the doctor's orders.

When some disease conditions are presnt, restricting the total amount of water consumed actually causes collapese of vital orans and death.

Rideau Canal Spectators Marvel at Peewee Destroyer

OTTAWA (CP) — Manoeuvring a destroyer through Ottawa's Rideau Canal on a summer's day isn't like battling enemy ships on the North Sea at the height of the Second World War. But it may attract more spectators.

John Walker seems accustomed to the attention he is getting cruising in his destroyer — a 46-foot scale replica of Canada's best-known war vessel, the Haida.

He's logged more than 5,000 miles since building the boat as a centennial project in 1967, mostly entertaining tourists near his home port of Kingston, Ont.

"Model ships have always been my hobby," said the 49-year-old boatmaker and repair man who lives in Perth, 50 miles north of Kingston.

He likes destroyers, the biggest of Canadian warships, because "they look so nice."

The veteran sailor never sailed on the original Haida, one of four tribal class Canadian destroyers. He spent two years in the North Sea on a frigate — a smaller anti-submarine ship.

His own Haida, built for $1,500, is scaled one-eighth the size of the original with real wind instruments, moveable turrets and guns that blast.

Powered by a 20-horsepower motor, he and his wife mostly cruise the Thousand Islands area near Kingston. Mr. Walker says the cramped quarters "sleep three comfortably and sometimes four."

He is in Ottawa for a month showing the boat to tourists under sponsorship of the Canadian War Museum.

Asked whether he wishes he were back in the navy, he said: "Yes. I'd be retired now."

RCMP Ask Public Aid

COURTENAY — RCMP are asking the public to help trace the June 27 activities of a Qualicum Beach man found beaten to death in his car last Friday.

Stanley Bruce Diamond, 43, self-employed in the lumber business, was found dead in his car. The vehicle was in a ditch on the Island Highway near Cook Creek, 20 miles south of Courtenay.

Diamond was last seen leaving his home shortly before 11 p.m. June 27. He was wearing a blue shirt and tan work trousers.

Cattleman Traced

RED DEER, Alta. (CP) — An Alberta cattle businessman charged with fraud and theft involving more than $100,000 has been bound over by Australian authorities for extradition to Canada, Crown Prosecutor Stan Fowler said.

Joseph Fitzgerald, 32, president of Joseph P. Fitzgerlad Livestock Ltd., of Alberta, will be escorted by Canadian police to Red Deer to face the charges, he said.

8 CARDS OF THANKS

We wish to express our sincere thanks to all our friends and relatives for their acts of kindness, expressions of sympathy, floral tributes and spiritual bouquets at the sudden passing of our beloved daughter and sister, Rosaleen Roberta Hourigan. Thanks also to McCall Bros.
Well the rain exploded with a mighty crash as we fell into the sun
If you love something set it free
If it comes back its yours
If it doesn't it never was
Some men see things as they are and say why?
I dream things that never were and say "Why Not."
Robert Kennedy.
—Mr. and Mrs. Des Hourigan and family

The family of the late Domenico Santucci wish to express their heartfelt thanks to all their friends, neighbors and relatives for their kind expressions of sympathy and Spiritual Bouquets at the time of his passing. Special thanks to Dr. M. A. Ross, Dr. N. S. Lockyer and the Nursing Staff of the Ryal Jubilee Hospital for their untiring care.

To our many kind and thoughtful friends who have expressed their sympathy with us in the sudden passing of my husband, Jack, and Bob and Bruce's father. We wish to convey our sincerest thanks. — Winnifred Crowe.

Candidates Pause for Breath

Local candidates in the federal election will wind down their campaigns today and most will take a breather Sunday, the last day before the election.

The candidates in both the Victoria and Esquimalt-Saanich ridings are out mainstreeting and door-knocking today, but there are certain other things they can't do.

Under the Elections Act, it is illegal for anyone to hand out a flag, ribbon or label which identifies either a specific or a political party for 48 hours before an election and during the polling day itself.

On election day, Monday, it is illegal for anyone to use a loudspeaker, a flag, banner or bunting to support a candidate.

Returning officers were busy today handling phone calls from voters asking where to vote. All voters were informed by mail where their polling station is, but anyone who forgets can call 598-5131 for Victoria and 479-8414 in Esquimalt-Saanich.

Victoria returning officer Eleanor Allan said the office was open until 11 p.m. Friday to accept applications for proxy votes. The Esquimalt-Saanich office was also open late.

Mrs. Allan said today she was surprised at the number of people who still did not know that the polling stations do not open until 9 a.m. instead of 8 a.m. Monday. They close at 8 p.m.

THIEVES GET $1,500 TOOLS

Tools valued at $1,500 were reported stolen overnight from Goldstream Rentals Victoria Ltd., 751 Cloverdale.

A Saanich police spokesman said a early morning patrol discovered the front window broken and front door ajar.

The office area had been ransacked and a tool storage area on the main floor entered, the spokesman said. A skylight window on the roof was also found broken.

Police said about 13 different kinds of tools were taken including torque wrenches, sanders, grinders, drills and a small air compressor.

Grain Gamble Costly—Paper

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Free Press says grain spokesmen in Vancouver, Calgary and Winnipeg predict that at least one grain company or co-operative stands to lose millions of dollars by "gambling" on part of roughly 30,000 tons of high protein wheat in storage in Vancouver.

The newspaper today quoted a Vancouver grain broker as saying 10,000 tons were sold by Alberta Wheat Pool to China at a loss of about $2 a bushel.

The unnamed spokesman said the pool purchased the 13.5 per cent protein wheat some time ago from the Canadian wheat board on a flat cash basis for about $6 a bushel.

Trade books have shown an Alberta pool offering of 10,000 tons of wheat for the last two months for $4.10 a bushel.

Ed Pierce, a representative of XCAN, normally the exporting company for both Alberta and Saskatchewan wheat pools, said last week that Alberta Wheat Pool had 10,000 tons of wheat which may have been sold. However, he claimed no knowledge of who the purchaser might be or the possible purchase price.

But Keith Phillips of Alberta Wheat Pool said his wheat pool didn't own the 10,000 tons and denied any sale had taken place.

Pierce also said the remaining 20,000 tons of stored wheat have been purchased on speculation from a Canadian exporting company by Italian interests.

The Free Press says trade sources here and in Vancouver claim the wheat is owned by Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and may have been sold to China or Korea for less than $4.10 a bushel.

Three Bands Get Grants

A total of $69,956 has been given three south Vancouver Island Indian bands and an Indian education club from the provincial First Citizens Fund.

Beecher Bay Reserve in East Sooke was given $60,000 to complete its marina; Sooke Band Council was given $4,485 to complete a cultural hall; Pacheenaht Indian Band at Port Renfrew was granted $3,471 to buy educational equipment for a pre-school training program and the Indian educational club at William Head prison was granted $2,000 to conduct a life skills program and a native studies course.

The fund was set up to give financial help to native community and cultural projects.

BLACK: Erfim Geller, USSR

10.	NxP	N-B4
11.	P-B3	N3xP
12.	Resigns

What's this, you'll ask yourself. Surely White's 11th move wasn't a mistake, was it? Well, yes it was, as Grandmaster Geller demonstrates.

True, the loss of a pawn should not be enough to resign, but caught by surprise White throws in the towel. There could follow: 12.NxN,NxN; 13.PxN,BxNch; 14.QxB,QxB; 15.QxP,Q-K6ch; 16.R-B2,QxP; and White is a good pawn down. He did resign a bit too soon. It would have been interesting to see how Geller would have gone about fighting out this game.

Played in the Buenos Aires International, May, 1973.

LOOKING AROUND: The minister of education of Spain has inaugurated a chess in schools program. There are over a million pupils in Spain, so in a few years watch out for the Iberian Chess Army! Electric Mowers Recalled

Toronto (CP) — Black and Decker Manufacturing Co. Ltd. of Brockville, Ont., has announced it is advising purchasers of some 1974 lawnmowers to return them to dealers to have an "insulation deficiency" corrected.

In a statement Thursday, the company said that "no injuries or accidents are known to have occurred" as a result of the deficiency.

Units which may be affected are the 18-inch dual blade model, bearing the following nameplate date: No. 5740; 50-60 HZ 120; Amps 10.0; Type 2; RPM 7500.

The company says that those machines with the letter M stamped beside Type 2 do not have the deficiency.

'73, '74 Volvos Recalled

GOTHERNBURG, Sweden (AFP) — Between 25,000 and 30,000 1973 and 1974-model Volvos will be recalled because of a technical defect. The Swedish Motor Co. said Thursday night it was telling owners of the cars to take their vehicles to their dealers to have the throttle linkage replaced free of charge. The company said the accelerator pedal, after prolonged use, might stick to the floor board.

Vitamins, in Large Quantities, Flush Out Drugs

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

Jay Hyder was a drug user.

Now off drugs, he takes 9,000 milligrams of niacin (vitamin B-3) a day and says he feels great.

He and five other young ex-drug users are so convinced of the importance of vitamins and nutrition to people recovering from drug habits they've started a new agency, Back to Living, to spread the word.

The agency, an Opportunities for Youth project funded by a $8,382 federal grant for the summer, operates from noon until midnight every day from headquarters on Fisgard Street across from the police station.

They try to warn users who will listen what drugs — illegal or prescription — do to their bodies and minds, and to advise them on key vitamins and minerals to repair damage caused by drug use.

"When you use drugs you deplete your vitamins and minerals beyond the amount that can be replaced by normal eating," Hyder said in an interview.

Also, drug users live on candy bars and junk food, he said, so many suffer from early symptoms of malnutrition, such as buzzing in the ears, mood changes and hallucinations.

And for months after they stop using drugs, many suffer from the "drug wipeout syndrome," a vague collection of symptoms that leave them physically and psychologically depressed, Hyder said.

The Back to Living group believe that a high protein diet and megavitamin treatment can ease these symptoms.

Niacin is a key vitamin, they say. Hyder takes 9,000 milligrams a day, but he says some people take as much as 130,000 mg. because their bodies need more.

To counteract the "drug wipeout" sickness they recommend a high protein "healing diet" of around 90 usable grams of protein a day.

That's a lot of protein — one egg has only 8 usable grams, an eight-ounce steak 50 grams.

The treatment closely follows the megavitamin treatment of schizophrenics pioneered by Saskatoon's Dr. Abram Hoffer. Hoffer has found niacin the key vitamin in treating schizophrenics.

The six Black to Living workers were brought together this spring by the Victoria branch of the Canadian Schizophrenia Association, a group which has been promoting Hoffer's work.

They see similarities between the "spaced out" symptoms of ex-drug users and those of schizophrenics.

Another supporter of the group is local social worker Ray Ferris. He said many drug users started using drugs to escape emotional or psychological problems, problems that might respond to orthomolecular treatment — the right vitamins and minerals.

Hyder's group also recommends niacin to drug users suffering a "bad comedown" from LSD or other psychedelic drugs. A few grams of niacin can shorten an acid trip by hours, he said.

Minerals such as calcium and magnesium can help alleviate the pain of someone coming off speed (amphetamines), he said.

As for heroin, the best method is eating nothing but drinking lots of water, said Hyder.

"Four days is enough to flush the junk out of your system."

With people coming off barbiturates (called downers), the only thing is to get them to the hospital fast, he said. Barbiturate withdrawal is highly dangerous and many addicts die from accidental overdoses.

The group opposes all drugs, from marijuana to heroin and cocaine, and they know them from experience.

"One of us has been strung out on heroin, one on speed, others have been over the 500 (trips) mark in LSD," Hyder said.

People who have come to them for help range in age from 17 to 40. They know there are many younger kids using every kind of drug, but few have yet sought their help in getting back to normal.

"When they get down that young they really don't have much discretion at all," Hyder said. "They'll pop anything."

Commonly-prescribed sedatives like Valium and Mandrax are easily obtained on the illegal market, he said.

Kids take Valium and beer together, not seeming to realize the danger of combining them. And Mandrax is especially dangerous, Hyder said, because users need increasingly more of the drug to get high so they almost inevitably reach the overdose point.

The OFY grant runs from mid-May to the end of August, and after that the group doesn't know what will happen.

"If we were duplicating a service we wouldn't worry," Hyder said, but he feels they're unique in Greater Victoria.

Suite Designers Slam Pro-Architect Plan

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Victoria city council has been accused of encouraging a "closed shop" situation by proposing that all condominiums built in Victoria must be designed by qualified architects.

At present the majority of apartment and condominium projects are designed by three or four design firms, which have no architects among their staff, but if city council accepts a recommendation of its planning committee that practice will have to end.

And the enforcement of the policy, designer Gary Bentham said Friday, could well put firms like his out of business.

Indicating he will try to express strong objections to the proposal before council's caucus session next Tuesday, Bentham said he is now working on a $2.5 million project "which could go right down the tube" if the city shuts the door to designers.

"What is going to happen is that there will be a closed shop for architects in Victoria. Engineers and designers will not be allowed to submit plans," he noted.

Bentham said in the three years since he established his business he has designed several apartment buildings in the Victoria area, and he has no reason to feel ashamed of any of them.

"I know the ground rules. I know how to make a building look good without putting gingerbread on it," he said.

"Sure, some designers may do an excellent job while others do a poor job, but the same applies to architects."

He said his own professional background is one of comprehensive architectural experience in the European meaning of the term — a three-year course in architectural technology supplemented by 10 years' practical experience in various fields of construction, including surveying and estimating.

"If it were not for the good draftsmen and good designers working for architects they would not go very far," he remarked. "In my case, if I was put out of business I might have to work for an architect, and then I'd be doing exactly the same work I'm doing now while he gets paid for it."

Bentham said another objection to the architects-only policy is that it could act as a deterrent to residential development, because "most development firms can't afford to put up a building with six to eight per cent taken off for architect's fees."

He said he supports the general principle of design controls for apartment development, but plans should be considered strictly on their merits rather than imposing a blanket exclusion of certain practitioners in the design field.

If restrictions have to be laid down, he added, they should relate to accepting plans from "approved" sources, whether they be architects, professional engineers or design consultants.

Another designer, Ted Lunt, told the Times Friday he had only just learned of the recommendation to council. He would only say that he is concerned at the suggested policy, and he will be represented in opposing it before council.

At city hall in recent months there have been complaints from aldermen about the design of apartment and condominium buildings, particularly with regard to their boxlike uniformity.

Architect David Hambleton, chairman of the city's advisory design panel which scrutinizes the plans for all major projects from the design viewpoint and recommends changes where they are considered necessary, proposed the architects-only policy which was endorsed by the planning committee earlier this week.

He has noted that buildings can conform to all zoning, technical and safety requirements yet still be esthetically undesirable.

Because a number of unsatisfactory plans come before the panel, requiring several meetings and numerous suggestions for improvement, Hambleton says there is a tendency for the panel members to be used as a free design service.

A city hall source said panel members on occasion have been irritated to find that certain plans required unnecessary attention and effort by the panel, "simply because the designers didn't seem to understand the changes and improvements that were needed."

REVOLVER STOLEN

A man stole $180 cash and a revolver from the manager's suite of the Thunderbird Motel, 600 Douglas, shortly before noon today.

Manager John Maurice Ouellette surprised the thief and gave chase but the man, described as being in his early twenties, got away.

The money was in a box on the top shelf of a cupboard and the revolver in a dresser drawer. Ouellette told police he had just left the room for about 10 minutes and didn't lock the door.

Flying Squad Hits the Blues In Hospital

Watts and Gain move Hendrick Schuyff

Victoria General Hospital has hired about 25 young people this summer who are not only helping staff but waging a winning campaign with patients against the hospital blues.

The blues can be partly a matter of loneliness, partly boredom, because hospital is something like jail — isolated from the outside world.

But the patients are being given a lift, in more ways than one, by the hospital's so-called "flying squad," four hustling young men who wheel them hither and yon for examination or treatment.

Then there are the young women and men, most 19 to 20 years old, who challenge them at cribbage, chess, checkers or cards, provide what's needed for leatherwork or just chat about this or that.

The "flying squad" of patient porters is a pilot project to determine if nurses can be relieved of the time-consuming task of moving patients, leaving them more time for nursing.

Squad members also make beds, says Barbara Burke, the hospital's director of nursing.

Others among the young summer help are developing and evaluating a distribution system aimed at making sure supplies arrive on the nursing units at times and in amounts needed.

It's generally accepted that most people confined to hospital suffer in some degree from loss of contact with the outside world, Burke says.

So four of the young people are serving as "occupational diversional therapists" in a project to measure the usefulness of this sort of assistance. Besides the card games and chitchat, they have shown movies and organized music sessions. Simple leatherwork is popular.

Nurses report that elderly patients who had shown signs of withdrawal and regression have greatly improved and look forward eagerly to visits from the students, Burke says.

Younger patients, especially in their late teens and early twenties, have shown they can accept their stay in hospital more readily if they have something to occupy their time. This is the group enjoying the leatherwork and other hand crafts.

Burke says nurses have long recognized the need for the kind of therapy the young people are providing but because of many other duties have often been unable to provide it.

A grant of $48,000 from the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service enabled the hospital to hire the summer helpers and the hospital staff is enthusiastic about the work they are doing, she says.

"We'll be sorry to see them go in the fall."

It's Cheaper to Dig Than Link Up Mains

A Metchosin family has given up the fight to get water piped to their home by the Greater Victoria Water District.

Pat Ridley, of 4912 William Head Road, said Friday she and her husband Larry had finally decided against spending the quoted amount of more than $2,000 to have the water line brought another 250 feet to their property line.

"We'll go ahead and build another well," Mrs. Ridley said.

The Ridleys moved to their two-acre home 14 years ago, dug one well and have been trying to get a water district line brought in since then.

The well serves the family for most of the year, but during the dry months the water supply often runs short.

All of the Ridley's neighbors have district water but the line stops 250 feet from their property line.

A recent letter from Mayor Peter Pollen, also chairman of the Greater Victoria Water District, indicated the price of the line extension was high because of inflation.

"We still think this is just a pile of nonsense," Mrs. Ridley said today.

"We'll drill a well and if they ever decide to bring the water line down as far as our place they can go ahead, but we won't be paying for it.

"The well will be a high initial expense but it's not as high as the water board price."

Payments on the $2,000 water line would be spread over six years, but the estimated price of about $400 for a 40-foot well similar to the Ridley's present well must be paid in a lump sum.

Hong Kong Vets Gather in City

About 150 veterans of the Second World War Battle of Hong Kong will gather in Victoria, July 11-13 for their annual convention.

The men belonged to either the Winnipeg Grenadiers or the Royal Rifles of Canada regiments and were all captured on Christmas Day, 1941, and held prisoner by the Japanese.

Saanich Mayor Ed Lum will open the convention Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Ingraham Hotel.

The veterans will conduct a business session Friday and see the film, Lost in Error, the only film made of the battle.

The veterans will hold a parade and memorial service at the Cenotaph in front of the legislative buildings Saturday at 10 a.m.

Maj.-Gen. George Pearkes will take the salute in front of the Empress Hotel.

The parade will be led by the 16th Scottish pipe band.

Every province in Canada will be represented at the convention. Kate Christie, one of the nursing sisters who was with the men during their imprisonment, will attend from Toronto. Another of the veterans expected is Charles Edwards, now the mayor of Grand Falls, Nfld.

After the Politicking, a Sealed Box

MR. CANDIDATE MAY promise us voters the moon on a silver platter. He may be sincerity itself or an honest-john fox with an eye on the pay and perquisites that go with a seat in the House of Commons. But when the politicking is done — when the last appeal has been made and the final denunciation uttered — the election trail ends at a sealed steel box with a slot in its top of a size to accommodate a folded ballot.

When it comes to the selection of our representatives, we the people have the last word. Eventually, I suppose the process by which we register our choices will be dehumanized. We will yank on a lever as if playing a slot machine, and the computers will take over from there. Until that time arrives, the apparatus by which Canadians throw the rascals out and install the good guys in office will remain as we have it today.

The foursquare ballot box, hedged about by a set of federal regulations that leave no loopholes for whim or chance.

The ballot itself, secret and anonymous — taken for granted by the voter, but not easily now.

The screen, the pencil on its string, the seals, the forms, the envelopes that reduce the taking and the tallying of your vote to a standarized drill in every polling station.

As a voter, I like to know that at Tuktoyuktuk and Antogonish, Boisevain and Campbell River, there is neither regional disparity nor special concession on election day. Our views differ. Some of us vote for the party, others for the man. The polling station may be a trading post or city school gymnasium. But election procedures are identical to the least detail.

There is also the human equation. Standardized apparatus and regulations to cover every contingency are all very well, but they must have people to make them work. I've observed any number of elections, and it never fails to amaze me how efficiently ordinary men and women serving in their home neighborhoods as deputy returning officers and poll clerks carry out their assignments.

I've heard it claimed that there's nothing like a spell of jury duty to provide a basic understanding of our judicial system. By the same token, I could wish for every adult an election day spent as deputy returning officer or poll clerk. These two, sworn into government service for the occasion, work as a team with the DRO in charge. They are on the front line of the election, the guardians of your ballot and as such they meet the voter in all his aspects.

Their working day begins well before the polls open and is by no means over when the last voter has dropped his ballot. It is a day keyed to the peculiar rhythms of an election, marked by busy spells and lulls, and likely to become more than a trifle frantic before it ends.

The first voters to arrive are men and women who wish to cast their ballots early and have stopped by on their way to work. They provide a brisk but brief warmup for the polling station crews.

Through the forenoon and into the afternoon, the pace tends to be more leisurely and the voters older. Retired couples, veterans of numerous elections, put in to go through a familiar routine and depart with an air of duty done.

In the middle and late afternoon there's a sending of young housewives, their chores of the earlier day finished, children napped, and no need to be thinking about dinner preparations for a spell. Oftener than not, these voters bring their kids with them: many a halfpint Canadian gets his first glimpse of the electoral process from his mother's arm.

The pace quickens as jobholders interrupt the trip home from work to vote. But there are still plenty of names on the deputy returning officer's list, and the experienced DRO recognizes any slight dinnertime lull as no more than the calm before the storm.

The big rush begins after dinner, and builds to its climax in the half hour before the polls close. It is then that DRO and poll clerk — checking names, passing out ballots and dealing with the inevitable side-issues as they arise — may wish they had four hands apiece instead of the regulation two.

Then, abruptly, the rush is over. The last ballot is in the box, the last voter gone, and the polls closed. What remains is strictly-regulated detail, to be carried out under the watchful eyes of the party scrutineers.

Only when the ballot box has been delivered to the district returning officer is the polling station team free to turn its attention to the wider election picture.

Who won, who lost in what riding, and how did it all turn out?

MARINA WILLING TO BEND

The developers of the proposed marina in Saanichton Bay will do whatever Central Saanich council asks in order to calm residents' fear on the effects of the marina, Bob Wright said Friday.

Wright, a co-owner of Saanichton Bay Marina Ltd., said he wasn't sure exactly what the "social impact assessment study" requested by council Tuesday was, but said it would be carried out.

"I expect to find out soon just what it is and then we'll go ahead with it."

"If this is what they want, then we'll do it."

Wright said he felt the plans for the 1,200-berth marina were good, but "if the impact study says it's not good then it won't go in."

The project has come under fire from some residents, the East Saanich Indian band and ecology groups.

"I think what we'll do is tell council to pick someone themselves to do the study and then we'll pay for it. That way it will be completely impartial."

SNIPER SCARE

Times News Services

DALLAS — Memories of the assassination of John Kennedy were brought back to life here today when it appeared that a sniper had fired on a vehicle in a motorcade carrying Vice-President Gerald Ford.

An early report said that a bullet had smashed the windshield of a police cruiser escorting the vice-president to a speech here.

Police later said that either a rock thrown from the roadway or heat had caused the windshield to shatter.

A search of the area found no spent cartridge casings or signs of a gunman.

Ford came to Dallas to speak at the dedication of the new World Trade Centre, the same destination of president John F. Kennedy when he was assassinated here Nov. 22, 1963.

5% B.C. Mortgages On Leased Land

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Provincial government first mortgages for homes on leased Crown land will carry interest rates as low as five per cent for low-income families.

Cabinet regulations released Friday will allow mortgages up to $30,000 on leased land and set the term of the mortgage at five years.

Regular interest rates will be 10 per cent but special "eligible" rates will vary, so that low-income families will not have to spend more than 25 per cent of their income on housing.

The regulation states that the eligible rate shall be set so that the combined cost of the mortgage, the ground rent on the leased land and the property taxes do not exceed one-quarter of the family income.

That lower interest rate, however, cannot drop below five per cent.

The regulations come with proclamation of the Leasehold and Conversion Mortgage Act, passed during the recent legislative session.

Housing Minister Lorne Nicolson said at that time about $25 million would be set aside for mortgages on leased land and $15 million for home conversions.

Under the regulations, people willing to divide up their residences to accommodate other families will be eligible for a $12,000 first mortgage on their first conversion and a $6,000 mortgage on a second conversion.

The leasehold mortgages will carry an eight per cent interest rate if the mortgage is the first financial charge on the conversion and a nine per cent rate if it is the second.

Those mortgages will also be for a five-year term.

The first mortgages on leased land can be reviewed every three years and the eligible interest rate increased if the family income has risen.

The mortgages will first be offered to families at the Meadowbrook subdivision under construction in Coquitlam.

The 176-home subdivision was purchased by the government last week and the first houses on the leased Crown land will be available in a month.

The property lots will be leased for 50-year terms.

LOGGERS STRIKE 8 A.M. MONDAY

The 6,000-member loggers' local of the International Woodworkers of America in Vancouver announced today members will go on strike Monday at 8 a.m.

At the same time, a labor trouble-shooter for the provincial government stepped into the coast forestry industry dispute, meeting with IWA negotiators in Vancouver.

As associate deputy labor minister Jim Kinnaird met the union, Ben Thompson, president of the loggers' local, condemned the rumored possibility of the provincial government taking another vote among the 32,000 members in the coast woods union.

A contract offer from Forest Industrial Relations, which represents 120 companies, was rejected by a narrow margin in vote count figures released earlier this week.

Thompson said majority wishes have always been and must continue to be upheld in any democracy and the majority rejected the proposed settlement.

The union is left with three alternatives, he said — a new offer from the industry, third-party intervention or a strike by the union membership.

The first two are not forthcoming and the third is being applied, he said.

Gov't Ski Resort?

The provincial government may now be the owner by default of the partially constructed Brohm Ridge ski development near Whistler Mountain.

A chalet, some other buildings and towers for a gondola lift were built at the site before financial and other problems put an end to the development being built on Crown land, three miles north of Squamish.

Resources Minister Bob Williams said Friday the agreement to lease the land to Adolf Bauer never actually took place and the developer was told he had until June 30 to remove the improvements.

Improvements were not removed, however, and the government must now decide what to do with the development.

Neil Cook, of N. B. Cook Ltd. in Vancouver, purchased the debentures of Bauer's Garibaldi Glacier Resort company, and Williams said it is now a matter of argument whether Cook owns the improvements.

HERMAN doesn't hum when it comes to feeding time . . . it's a continual series of "eeks" as its tongue flicks in and out to get the nectar from the tip of the finger held out by Ronni Lynn Medwid of Shawnigan Lake. The hummingbird was found in the bush after its nest was destroyed by a backhoe. The bird is now flying free but comes back to the home house at night and at the odd time of the day for feeding.

Unexciting Right Up 'Til the End

Times News Services

Leaders of all four major political parties are making a final pitch to Canada's undecided voters this weekend as a generally unexciting campaign draws to a close.

Betting is that those people will take their indecision to the polls with them on Monday and the country will wind up with another minority regime.

Election night, in fact, looms as the most thrilling part of the campaign with the final outcome in doubt right until ballots in B.C. because of the time difference the last in the country to be tallied are counted.

The part of the nation which holds the key to the future direction of the country's leadership, though, is heavily-populated southern Ontario.

(For an in-depth survey of marginal seats which could show an early trend, see Page 2. If you are among the undecided, an overview of campaign promises by all parties appears on Page 32.)

Polls published so far have given the Liberals the edge, but there is enough of an undecided vote and enough margin for possible error in the polls to indicate that the government of Canada still is up for grabs.

That would mean the New Democratic Party, or perhaps the Social Credit party, would have the effective balance of power in a Commons in which either the Liberals of Prime Minister Trudeau or the Progressive Conservatives of Robert Stanfield form the government.

The final search for votes by Prime Minister Trudeau, Tory leader Robert Stanfield, NDP Leader David Lewis, Social Credit Leader Real Caouette and more than 1,100 candidates in the 264 constituencies brings to an end an election campaign that for the most part failed to catch fire.

FORSEY

Controls: Are They Legal?

WOODSTOCK, Ont. (CP) — The Progressive Conservative party proposal to impose income and price controls during peacetime may by unconstitutional, Senator Eugene Forsey said Friday.

Senator Forsey, an authority on the Canadian constitution, said the government's ability to control wages and prices is restricted by the British North American Act to national emergencies such as "war, famine or pestilence."

The question, he said, is when does inflation constitute a national emergency.

"When that point is reached is unclear — it's like asking how many grains make a heap," he said, adding that the time it would take a government to declare inflation an emergency "would bog down the allgedly wonderful psychological effects of the freeze."

3,000 Guard Soccer

MUNICH, Germany (UPI) — Authorities seeking to avert another Munich massacre have called in 3,000 police, including an anti-guerrilla squad, for the final two matches of the soccer World Cup tournament. (See also Page 12 for World Cup story.)

Police have imposed tight security around the Olympic Stadium, mindful of the Black September Palestinian guerrilla attack that killed 11 Israeli athletes and coaches at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

The security problem has been heightened by the visit of U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who planned to watch today's consolation match between Brazil and Poland, won 1-0 by Poland, and Sunday's final between West Germany and Holland.

. . . UNTIL THEFT DO THEM PART

More than $12,000 worth of wedding rings was stolen from People's Credit Jewelers Hillside store Friday.

Victoria police said the theft — involving 125 to 130 gold wedding bands — was discovered at 5:30 p.m. but could have occurred anytime earlier that day.

A spokesman said the theft was well executed.

The rings are described as plain yellow or yellow with white gold inlay. Some have a letter "A" inscribed inside a circle. Others have a reclining figure "8" with the letters "RJ" engraved inside.

Grits Never Tried On Tankers—Tory

VANCOUVER (CP) — John Fraser, the Progressive Conservative environment department critic, said Friday a confidential cabinet memorandum makes it clear the Canadian government never actively encouraged a Canadian oil pipeline as an alternative to the Alaska pipeline-oil tanker transport system.

Fraser, who is seeking re-election in Vancouver South, said the memorandum was given to him by an Ottawa reporter, who was not named. He said the document was given to him within a week of the occupation of the Indian affairs building in Ottawa in August, 1973, by a group of militant Indians. Officials said then that a number of documents had been taken from the building.

He said the document, marked confidential and entitled Canadian Position on a Northern Oil Pipeline, is dated 1971. It shows the government didn't want to actively promote a Canadian pipeline for two reasons — because it did not want to reduce the bargaining position with the Americans on a gas pipeline in Canada and because the government didn't want to aggravate the Indian land claims issue.

Fraser said the memorandum repeatedly tells cabinet that a decision on whether to support or fight the Alaskan pipeline must be made soon, because United States interests are taking Canada's silence for acceptance of the pipeline.

It wasn't until 1973, Fraser said, that External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said Canada had "only begun to fight" the idea of oil tankers.

Beryl Absolves Food Firms

OTTAWA (CP) — Increased profits of food companies were not a major cause of higher food prices in Canada during 1973, the federal food prices review board said in a report Friday.

A survey of 50 companies by the board showed an increase in net profits of 35 per cent last year and an increase of 14.8 per cent in the cost of food.

But board chairman Beryl Plumptre told a news conference that an analysis by economists showed that if the profits had been halfed, it would only have resulted in reducing the price increase by one per cent.

"The board concludes that the increased profits of food companies, while a contributing factor, were by no means a major cause of food price increases in Canada in 1973," the report said.

Grant Thompson of Halifax, a board member, said halfing the profits only resulted in a slight reduction of food prices because of the small profit margin on food products.

"If you're only making two cents profit on each $1 of sales cutting profit by half would only save one cent on the dollar," Thompson said.

The report said higher profits meant an increase in the rate of return on shareholders' investment, but the study shows the increase was not out of line with what was happening in the rest of the economy.

Rate of return in the manufacturing sector in 1973 was 13.9 per cent while for food processors it was 13.4 per cent. The return for food retailers was 10.9 per cent while non-food retailers got 12.2 per cent.

Asked if some of the companies could have provided the board with misleading figures, Mrs. Plumptre said she doubted it since the companies knew the board had the right to send auditors to check their books.

Basic factor in food costs was still supply and demand, Mrs. Plumptre said. As demand for products increased so did the prices.

Thompson said changes from outside the country also had helped push prices up.

"For instance, when the Australian dollar was revalued, it increased the price of hamburger since we got most of our hamburger from them," he said.

"And when the yen was revalued, the Japanese could afford to buy food from us, increasing demand and causing higher prices."

Thompson said many people seem to feel that the board is trying to do "a white-wash job," but that wasn't the case.

"We're willing to point the finger when we see something is wrong."

Tentative Pact Reached In Construction Tie-Up

VANCOUVER (CP) — The last major union in the British Columbia construction industry strike accepted a tentative agreement Friday.

Ratification could end by Thursday the two-month strike that has tied up more than $200 million worth of projects.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 213, signed a memorandum of agreement for a two-year contract with Construction Labor Relations Association following an all-day bargaining session.

Cliff Rundgren, union business agent, said the negotiating committee is recommending that the 1,500 members ratify the agreement in a vote Sunday.

If the membership approves, and CLRA members ratify the agreement Monday, workers could be back on the job Tuesday, said Rundgren.

Still without settlement are three smaller unions — the boilermakers, glaziers, and ironworkers.

Both ironworkers and glaziers rejected tentative agreements recommended by their negotiating committees, and the boilermakers turned down an offer approved by major unions because they want better increases in early stages of the contract.

Details of the electricians' contract offer were not released, but IBEW had been holding out for a better deal than the package accepted last week by 10 other unions.

'Progressive' Georgia City Strife-Torn

By PAUL WHITELAW
Special to the Times

ATLANTA — When Maynard Jackson was elected the first black mayor of this city last fall by a coalition of black and white voters, it reinforced a widely-held impression that Atlanta is the most progressive city of the so-called "new" American south.

Indeed, in many ways, Atlanta has been a model for other big U.S. cities — not only because of its impressive record of relatively-tranquil race relations, but in enlightened urban development and economic growth.

But the black mayor and the white police chief are now at each other's throats. The bitter dispute, in which the attempted firing of the chief by Jackson has been blocked by the courts, has caused a dramatic increase in racial tension that threatens to polarize the white and black communities. It flared into a riot last week — with blacks charging there was a brutal over-reaction by police. the incident was certainly more reminiscent of Selma or Birmingham a decade ago than Atlanta.

"I think clearly there are anxieties that came out of my election last year," admitted Mayor Jackson as he talked to a small group of out-of-town reporters in his city hall office this week.

The reporters had come to ing of Mrs. Martin Luther Atlanta because of the shoot- King Sr., and the mayor noted that he thought her murder "will have a compounding effect on race relations in this city."

Jackson expressed concern that many Atlantans — black and white — see his dispute with police chief John Inman, a hard-line law and order advocate, in racial terms. But the mayor maintains he wants to fire the chief because he is incompetent and has resisted attempts to make the police department more accountable to his administration and city council. The man he would like to appoint as a replacement is white.

The bad blood between the two men goes back to Jackson's term as vice-mayor. He has been a consistent critic of Inman since the chief was appointed two years ago by Mayor Sam Massell, who ran an openly rascist campaign for re-election last October. Jackson obtained more than 90 per cent of the black votes and 24 per cent of the ballots cast by white voters.

In the latest development in the dispute, the Georgia Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that Inman's case will be tried by city council — somewhat like an impeachment proceeding — which will require a two-thirds majority vote to remove him from office. While it is believed that the council will go along with the mayor, the proceedings are likely to create more bitterness.

Mayor Jackson maintains that, despite his fight with the chief, there remains a climate of tolerance in this city far superior to other U.S. urban centres; that the attention paid to the riot is merely the price of success.

"There was a mini-riot in Philadelphia the other day," he said, leaning forward across a large desk to stress his point. "That wasn't reported by too many newspapers."

The violent outburst in Atlanta occurred during a march to protest the shooting of a 17-year-old black parole violator by police. Because no permit had been issued for the march, police attempted to block the demonstrators at a downtown intersection. When the marchers refused to disperse, police moved in with billy clubs and horses. Ironically, almost all the policemen were black. Returning hurriedly from a conference of mayors in California, Mayor Jackson issued permits for further marches that were called for by the demonstration leaders, in an effort to prevent further violence. But the protest leaders decided on a temporary moratorium on further demonstrations when Mrs. King was killed.

"I've siigned an executive order recognizing them as commemorative marches," said Jackson, adding that his decision will have to be ratified at the next meeting of city council.

The mayor noted that because of his dispute with Chief Inman, he is "under a court order to rejoin from interfering with the police department."

"My inability to assure the safety of the community led me to oppose the march."

"The shooting of the young parole violator occurred in an atmosphere that is volatile because the city government is enjoined from control of the police department," continued the mayor. "We have an independent paramilitary organization in this city."

If last week's riot — which was front-page news in many American newspapers — pointed up the fight between Jackson and Chief Inman, it also focussed attention on the somewhat bitter differences among leaders of the black community. In a way, these divisions are the inevitable result of the tremendous advances by blacks in recent years — and the widening gulf between the growing black middle class and the poor.

Jackson, the 35-year-old son of a Baptist preacher, who cut his political teeth in the civil protest of the early 1960s, noted that he naturally "recognizes the right to address grievances peacefully."

But with a black in control of city hall, and an increasing number of blacks in positions of authority in both the city and state governments, the mayor believes the surest way to address grievances is through the courts and the manipulation of government machinery.

In this regard, he is supported by many of the most prominent civil rights leaders of a decade ago, including the Rev. Martin Luther King Sr.

Before the violent demonstration last week, telephone calls from both the mayor and Dr. King convinced the mother of the slain black youth not to permit a coffin with his body to be carried in the march. They had hoped that the mother's decision would cause a cancellation of the march.

But the protest leader, Rev. Hoseah Williams, who has been charged with inciting the riot, angrily told his followers: "... I'm not listening to these chicken-eating, money-loving, Cadillac-driving, bull-shitting preachers. They (police) are murdering our children and we've got to march."

DYING DISEASE but still a killer is smallpox which has claimed more than 30,000 lives in the Indian state of Bihar this year. According to the world Health Organization, the disease should be eradicated by the end of next year — other authorities put down the end of the decade before it is completely gone from the face of the earth. But these statistics are small consolation to suffering children such as the one above.

Grizzlies Find Pies Tastier in Dozens

CHANDALAR CAMP, Alaska (AP) — If they held a pie-eating contest at this remote Trans-Alaska Pipeline camp 100 miles north of the Arctic Circle, there's no doubt who would win — the grizzlies.

One hungry bear recently marched into the camp kitchen within full view of the cooks and gobbled 11 freshly-baked pies without so much as a burp.

Camp manager Pat Tizo admits he has a grudging admiration for the critters.

"I sure would like to hire them," he said. "They can really move dirt when they're digging out a squirrel."

Tizo, a weatherbeaten Irish-Italian veteran of pipeline construction projects throughout the world, says one bear took to sleeping under the kitchen:

"One day a plumber crawled under the kitchen to fix the pipes," he said.

"He heard something moving around and asked who it was. When he saw it was a bear, he beat it the hell out of there."

Actually, the grizzlies are a serious problem here and at other pipeline camps. Nonetheless, state fish and game officials have made it clear they won't tolerate harassment of the bears.

"Grizzlies were here first, and they will be here after we leave," Tizo said. "And we're not going to bother them any more than we have to."

Camp supervisors have firearms, but no bears have been shot — yet. And fish and game officials have given helicopter pilots permission to buzz potentially dangerous animals away from the workers.

Not long ago a survey crew stumbled on a grizzly which stopped feeding on a moose carcass just long enough to tree the surveyors. The bear wouldn't leave until a helicopter chased him off.

"I don't think they're afraid of the choppers," said pilot Bob Louck. "They just don't like the noise."

Spencer Linderman, a fish and game biologist, says the pilots sometimes go too far. He said one pilot kept chasing a black bear up a mountain. The bear wouldn't stay put because black bears don't like an alpine habitat, Linderman explained.

And he says much of the problem results from the workers and the bears being too inquisitive about each other.

One man tried to feed a bear while he was trying to shoot it with a tranquilizer gun to remove it from the camp, he added.

Linderman also says the problem would be reduced if cameras were barred from the camp.

"One time a guy was so busy taking a picture he didn't notice the bear coming and he had to run pretty fast," Tizo said.

So far no injuries have been reported, but some surveyors have balked at going back to work if bears are reported in the area.

A pipeline worker said one camp even set up a bear patrol.

However, an Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. spokesman denied that and said helicopter pilots merely check out areas before surveyors go to work.

Officials say the main difficulty may be that most workers simply are not familiar with bears.

100,000 Die on the Job Because of Safety Lack

STOCKHOLM (AP) — An estimated 100,000 workers around the world die on the job every year due to a lack of safety precautions, the director-general of the Geneva-based International Labor Organization (ILO) said Friday.

ILO Director Francis Blanchard said this at the opening of an international metal workers congress.

He cited as an example health risks at chemical works.

"The American National Academy of Science has estimated that there are about half a million chemical products in use in the United States," Blanchard said.

"Also we should not forget the effects of radioactive substances, noise and vibration hazards. These are problems that must be attacked on a broad front."

Another speaker, Ber Lundin, chairman of the Swedish Metal Workers Union with over 400,000 members, charged multi-national corporations with "exporting poor working conditions."

He said that Swedish and other concerns which operate internationally take advantage of gaps in the laws of various countries to export job hazards.

International co-operation among labor groups is needed to protect workers, he said.

"We also need legislation putting more responsibility on those who introduce new products. But that is not enough, the labor movement must get influence on the products research and development."

Ford Hikes Car Prices

OAKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. announced Friday it is increasing prices for 1974-model North American-built cars and trucks an average of $56 or 1.1 per cent, effective Monday, July 8.

The parent Ford company in the United States earlier this week announced an average increase of $58 or 1.3 per cent.

Some samples of the Canadian increases for the most popular models: Pinto two-door $48, Mustang II $58, Ford Galaxie 500 four-door pillared hardtop $78, Comet two-door $66, Cougar $82, Montego MX two-door $70.

Hotel Service Lousy? Buy Your Own

By SUE ARNOLD
The Observer

Here's how it was. Bernard McDonough, a fabulously wealthy industrialist from Parkersburg, W. Va., has an hour to kill at Shannon Airport waiting for a plane to New York.

Over a double Drambuie on the rocks with soda, he remarks to an old pal he's run into, one Brendan O'Regan, that he thinks most Irish hotels are lousy — no service, no appointments, no bathrooms.

Now this O'Regan happens to be chairman of the Irish Tourist Board and no fool. "Maybe," he says, "you should start your own hotel. Listen (he looks at his watch), we've just got time to look at a place that might interest you." Ten minutes and as many miles later they sweep into the drive of Dromoland Castle, County Clare, ancestral home of the O'Briens, Barons of Inchiquin and direct descendants of Brian Boru, High King of Ireland in the tenth century. None other but himself, the sixteenth Baron Inchiquin, is standing on the castle steps to welcome them, alerted no doubt by a discreet telephone call.

Kings Entertained

It was well known that Dromoland once played host to the crowned heads of Europe and that the baron's mother kept a personal staff of 20, but the fact remains that the baron himself is broke. The Inchiquin fortunes have been nibbled away over the years by land acts and death duties and not even the introduction of the more genteel tourist as paying guest in latter years can make ends meet. Something of this O'Regan has told McDonough during the drive from Shannon.

Lord Inchiquin ushers the visitors into an oak-panelled circular study situated in one of the castle's four massive towers. Refreshment is not offered. O'Regan does most of the talking. McDonough looks round the study and likes what he sees. He takes out a notepad (he's an impulsive man), writes down a figure and pushes it over to Lord Inchiquin, who nods. The figure is $250,000 to cover the castle, 400 acres of land surrounding it, salmon fishing, pheasant shooting, a sizable lily pond and a hermit's cave roughly the size of an air-raid shelter only more romantic.

Wreck to Resort

All that was over 10 years ago. On January, 1963, the transformation of Dromoland Castle from rundown wreck to tourist resort began. Had Versailles as large a work force? Four hundred and eighty-five laborers labored, 95 painters painted. Architects and interior designers flew in hourly from New York. Sixty-seven new bathrooms were plumbed (64 more than before), central heating pipes bored into the 5-foot-thick walls, towers were re-crenellated, the whole castle re-roofed: $500,000 worth of furnishings were imported from the U.S., including a $7,500 chandelier that took 10 men three weeks to erect. Back in 1811 when the fourteenth baron started to rebuild Dromoland in its present, grey-walled, high Gothic style, it cost $200,000 to haul the stone from a nearby quarry and 15 years to complete. McDonough was through refurbishing in six months for a total cost of $2 million.

Iron Out Troubles

We heard about the place some time ago: 10 years ago, in fact. We thought we would give them a chance to settle in — iron out their teething troubles. We thought a decade would be fair; so we've just been. Photographer Tony McGrath was wildly enthusiastic about posh hotels, having just stayed at one such in Rome where he had photographed the pastry chef holding his favorite little holding his favorite little number, a gondola and gondolier made entirely of chocolate cake and whippped cream. "And do you know," he went on, excitedly, "once they've taken a slice out of the cake they chuck the rest away. All their puddings are virginal." Was there any chance, we wondered, of doing a similar shot with the pastry chef at Dromoland?

During this outburst we fancied the castle's publicity officer had been growing restive. She said doubtfully that she didn't think . . .

As a matter of fact, McDonough made most of his money from shovels. He owns the largest shovel business in the world, which turns out 20,000 shovels every day. He went in for castles for a number of reasons. For a start he is Irish. His grandparents, so the story goes, trudged barefoot past the very gates of Dromoland in 1861 on their way from Galway to the emigrant ship at Cork. The pudding trolley notwithstanding, McDonough is also keen on variety — his other business interests include cement, gentlemen's shoes and river excavation, the combined profits of which make him worth around $25 million. Naturally, like all decent millionaires, he did it all himself.

Hotel Dormant

He worked his way through Georgetown Law School in Washington, D.C., as a cabdriver, and recently gave the old place a million dollars to build a new centre. It is to be called the McDonough Centre. Since weighing in with Dromoland, he has built three more hotels in the Shannon area.

One of them, the Limerick Inn, opened in 1970 and closed six weeks later. It turned out that the Clare County Council mistrusted the style of his fire escapes — would he redesign them? McDonough objected to being pushed around like that. He refused. The council withdrew the hotel's liquor licence, so there it stands to this day, its beds made, its 300 table covers set and its plants watered, all at a cost of $25,000 a year, with few prospects of reopening. On his monthly trips to Ireland, McDonough wanders about the echoing rooms moodily costing the furniture and wondering if he could turn it into a convent.

McDonough is a short man in a bulky wool suit who sits with his arms crossed over his head like a bemused chimp. He has bought a house a mile from the castle, which is full of hotel furniture and hotel silver. Sometimes he sends up to the castle for a sandwich, which he eats alone at a dining table that would comfortably hold 12. He's odd about food. Business colleagues have got so fed up with the plain, ungarnished spaghetti he provides at business lunches in Parkersburg, that they've taken to bringing their own ketchup. Dromoland visitors are used to his short figure mooching around the grounds offering them drinks on the house or driving his Mercedes over the fairway of the hotel's golf course. Since he bought his castle, other Americans have bought others. Would he consider owning another himself? "You can get too much cake in your stomach," he said.

Just Good Thieves?

COMPTON, Calif. (UPI) — Thieves who stole an arsenal of weapons and ammunition from a California national guard armory could have been members of a terrorist group or "just good burglars who knew there was a wide open market for firearms," police said Friday.

"We just don't know who was involved,' 'said Compton police detective Arthur Camarillo. "It wasn't a run-of-the-mill burglary. The thieves knew how to get in and they had the right tools."

The weapons cache, which included nearly 100 rifles and seven machine guns, was stolen from the unguarded armory sometime Thursday by thieves who broke down two doors and used a power drill to break into a vault.

A silent alarm was being installed in the armory, but work on it had not been completed.

Police confirmed Friday that all of the firearms were immediately useless to the thieves because the firing pins and bolt mechanisms had been removed and stored in another armory in San Luis Obispo, Calif.

All of the rifles were M16S, the standard weapon of American troops in Vietnam, which has a civilian counterpart, the AR-15 used by sportsmen.

Federal firearms officials said the AR-15 bolt assembly could be fitted without modification in an M16, although it would not be capable of fully automatic fire.

"However," an official added, "if someone has access to a machine shop or used a file carefully, he could easily convert an AR-15 action bolt to permit automatic fire."

Also stolen from the armory were eight grenade launchers, one .45-calibre automatic pistol, 3,360 rounds of .50 bullets, 1,000 rounds of other bullets, 156 smoke and gas grenades and 75 gas masks.

The FBI also entered the investigation because the theft involved government property.

"There are no suspects and no indication of any group or any organization responsible for the disappearance of the weapons and ammunition," an FBI spokesman said.

Camarillo said he thought it more likely that the thieves were professionals who planned to sell the weapons on the black market.

The detective did not discount, however, the possibility that a terrorist group such as the Symbionese Liberation Army, whose last hideouts were known to be in Los Angeles, could be involved.

Authorities are also investigating the possibility that inside information was available to the burglars.

"I've been a cop 10 years and I worked in burglary for three years and I've never seen a more-professional job," Compton police Sgt. Cliff Smith said.

Outline of Communism Course Said Illegal

By IAN MacDONALD
Times London Bureau

LONDON — Birmingham City Council has run into the Church of England, the Conservative party and a government lawyer because of an attempt to teach schoolchildren an outline of communism and humanism from next fall.

This city in the industrial Midlands produced a new religious education syllabus after 400 teachers and churchmen spent four years drawing it up. A first run of 10,000 copies had been intended to go out to teachers in Birmingham area schools in September.

Publication has been suspended and the future of the new syllabus placed in jeopardy because two legal experts, one from the Church of England and one from the department of education and science, have said that the sections dealing with communism and humanism are illegal under the 1944 Education Act.

Should the Birmingham syllabus have to be changed the consequences might be far-reaching. Religious courses in all parts of the country might become subject to inspection and possible change.

The 1944 act stated that religious instruction should be given in schools throughout the country. Over the years those drawing up religious education syllabuses have tended to provide for broad religious education rather than straight instruction.

The Birmingham handbook, which would replace one that has been in use for 24 years, outlines the faiths of Judaism, Sikhism, Islam and Hinduism as well as Christianity.

In its controversial section titled non-religious stances for living, there is a 40-page section on communism which is longer than the section on Christianity. Humanism also is explained.

It was planned that communism and humanism would be taught for half a term each as part of a four-year course for children between 12 and 16.

Similar courses are being taught in parts of Lancashire and Yorkshire as well as other parts of the country.

But the Inner London Education Authority syllabus, for instance, has 96 pages with three and one half pages on non-Christian religions and only 15 words on communism. In one Yorkshire area the syllabus has 115 pages, 16 lines on comparative religions and 10 words on communism.

The Labor party controls Birmingham City Council and the first shots across the bow of the education committee came from Conservative party members incensed at the idea of school children being educated to understand communism.

Next came a legal opinion to the city legal adviser from an expert acting for the National Society for Promoting Religious Education in accordance with the principles of the Church of England. This society is the negotiating body between the Church of England and the department of education and science.

Regarded as a leading authority on ecclesiastical and education law he found the new syllabus seemed to conflict with the provisions of the 1944 act.

A legal adviser to the education committee said the presentation of non-religious stances was probably illegal unless it was done "for the advancement of religious knowledge."

Conservative Councillor Neil Scrimshaw said he has tried to have the communism section removed and added: "I would have thought the controlling Labor party would have inquired to see if the proposed syllabus was lawful before bringing it to the education committee after four years."

Conservative Leader Edward Heath told Birmingham Tories that it should be "clearly understood that communism has nothing to do with religion. It is a political ideology opposed to and alien from democratic practices which we enjoy in this country."

A legal opinion from the department of education and science a few days ago said the syllabus is invalid and should be reconsidered.

Now Birmingham education committee is seeking another outside legal opinion, this time from a barrister. Councillor Sheila Wright, chairman of the committee, said someone should challenge it in court and if it is found to be illegal then the 1944 act should be amended to make the syllabus legal.

Rev. Brian Rice, who represents Birmingham's Diocesan Education Council on the education committee, said there is much to commend the pioneering syllabus, although it was felt that communism had received an uncritical appraisal. "But to be fair about it, there was nothing critical said about Christianity either," he added.

Turkey Stalls Search for Ark

ANKARA (AP) — If Noah's Ark does lie on the top of Mount Ararat in eastern Turkey, where the Bible says it landed, it must sit there for another year at least.

The Turkish government has banned ark-hunting expeditions this year to the 17,000-foot peak.

"We have not given permission yet to any group, and we do not intend to do so," a government official here said. He gave no reasons.

Affected by the ban are at least eight expeditions.

Mount Ararat lies in a sensitive military zone near the three-way border of Iran, Turkey and the Soviet Union.

No group hunting for the ark has been allowed into the area in five years. A U.S. group headed by R. E. Crawford made the last trip in 1969. Crawford planned to return in 1970, bringing a team of scientists and $1 million in funds, but was denied permission.

In recent years scientists claim to have found new evidence to substantiate the biblical story that the ark was left high and dry on Mount Ararat when the flood subsided.

In 1955, French explorer Fernand Navarra brought down several pieces of timber which appeared hand-hewn. Tests indicated they were between 1,500 and 5,000 years old. Navarra said the ark was imbedded under a stationary glacier in a lake of ice.

Some say satellite pictures of Mount Ararat show an elliptical shape on the mountain top which resembled the descriptions of the ark.

CRIME FIGURE OUT ON BAIL

MONTREAL (CP) — Vincenzo (Vic) Cotroni, described by police as a leading underworld figure, was released Friday on $25,000 bail and a pledge not to leave Quebec following a ruling by Judge Albert Mayrand of the tion and answers which were Quebec Court of Appeal.

Cotroni, 63, was jailed Thursday after Judge Rheal Brunet, chairman of the Quebec Police Commission, ruled that his testimony at the commission's inquiry into organized crime amounted to a refusal to testify.

Cotroni, who faces a maximum penalty of one year in prison, will be sentenced July 10.

Judge Brunet, referring to Cotroni's 1,078-page testimony, said "it would be too tedious to cite each contradiction and answers which werre at times obscure, often confusing or clearly unintelligible."

"We are convinced, without a shadow of doubt, that you decided to give testimony which was voluntarily, incomprehensible, disconnected, vague, hazy and equivalent to a veiled refusal to testify."

Soviets Trace Alaska History

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (UPI) — A team of Soviet scientists, trying to trace Alaskan Aleuts who migrated from Siberia up to 100,000 years ago, arrived here Friday on the first leg of an expedition which will take them to the Aleutian Islands.

The scientists, believed to be the first from the Soviet Union to conduct orgial research in the United States, will be assisted by American scientists.

The five-person team from the Academy of Sciences' institute of history, theology and philosophy will stay here until Monday and attend dinners and luncheons hosted by University of Alaska scholars.

The five then will travel to Nikolski on the Aleutian chain for three to four weeks study at an archeological site previously worked by Dr. William Laughlin, a professor of bio-behavioral sciences at the University of Connecticut.

"We know where the migrants went to but not where they came from. They (the Russians) know where they came from but not where they went to," Laughlin said earlier in New York.

"We've already located a village site on the island that dates back to between 8700 and 7800 B.C.," Laughlin said. He said this was about the time the Bering land bridge that connected Asia and North America finally split apart.

Dr. Alexei Okladnikov, leader of the Soviet scientific team, said "You know it from your side; we from ours together we can accomplish something fantastic.

"First we wish to know how the Aleuts came to what is now the new world," Odladnikov said. "Second, we wish to know how they managed to settle there — what kind of culture and what stage of development they reached."

Slaying 'Orders From God'

ATLANTA (UPI) — Marcus Wayne Chenault's attorney said Friday the accused killer of Mrs. Martin Luther King Sr. apparently is pleased with his actions because of the emotional heartbreak he inflicted on the King family, even though he missed his prime target.

Chenault, a 23-year-old college dropout from Dayton, Ohio, had earlier told officers he came here on "orders from God" to kill the father of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Randolph Bacote, Chenault's attorney, said the former Ohio State University student indicated he thought he could reach Dr. King after he unleashed a barrage of gunfire inside the Ebenezer Baptist Church Sunday, killing Mrs. King and Deacon Edward Boykin and wounding Mrs. Jimmie Mitchell.

It was Mrs. Mitchell, ironically, who showed Chenault where Dr. King and his wife were sitting.

"I was sitting next to Mrs. Mitchell," Chenault told his attorney. "I asked her to point out Dr. King because I wanted to meet him. She pointed him out and he was on the other side of the room. And, as a matter of fact, she stated that was his wife in the front playing the organ."

While Bacote and the U.S. Justice Department discounted the theory the shootings were part of a conspiracy, a Dayton minister still stuck to the idea Friday.

The Rev. David Gilbert, head of the Dayton chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said he has thought there was a conspiracy against black preachers and backed by whites ever since King's son was shot to death in Memphis in 1968.

In Washington, the justice department said that while Chenault belonged to a "very, very small religious group," the FBI was unable to link the group to the killing.

Bacote said he had "no doubt whatsoever" that Chenault was not part of a conspiracy, and he quoted Chenault as joking, "if they can find a group or faction, have them raise funds for my defence."

What's this, you'll ask yourself. Surely White's 11th move wasn't a mistake, was it? Well, yes it was, as Grandmaster Geller demonstrates.

True, the loss of a pawn should not be enough to resign, but caught by surprise White throws in the towel. There could follow: 12.NxN,NxN; 13.PxN,BxNch; 14.QxB,QxB; 15.QxP,Q-K6ch; 16.R-B2,QxP; and White is a good pawn down. He did resign a bit too soon. It would have been interesting to see how Geller would have gone about fighting out this game.

LOOKING AROUND: The minister of education of Spain has inaugurated a chess in schools program. There are over a million pupils in Spain, so in a few years watch out for the Iberian Chess Army! The Barcelona daily "Vanguardia" had a three-page spread for newcomers to the game recently. It was written by International Master Roman Toran of Madrid.

Electric Mowers Recalled

Toronto (CP) — Black and Decker Manufacturing Co. Ltd. of Brockville, Ont., has announced it is advising purchasers of some 1974 lawnmowers to return them to dealers to have an "insulation deficiency" corrected.

In a statement Thursday, the company said that "no injuries or accidents are known to have occurred" as a result of the deficiency.

Units which may be affected are the 18-inch dual blade model, bearing the following nameplate date: No. 5740; 50-60 HZ 120; Amps 10.0; Type 2; RPM 7500.

The company says that those machines with the letter M stamped beside Type 2 do not have the deficiency.

'73, '74 Volvos Recalled

GOTHERNBURG, Sweden (AFP) — Between 25,000 and 30,000 1973 and 1974-model Volvos will be recalled because of a technical defect. The Swedish Motor Co. said Thursday night it was telling owners of the cars to take their vehicles to their dealers to have the throttle linkage replaced free of charge. The company said the accelerator pedal, after prolonged use, might stick to the floor board.
